Today the procedure must be described in the most delicate terms, else the news media will refuse to use it. Example: the unborn baby is a "fetus" or a "blob of tissue," and its death simply a "termination of pregnancy."

In the early days I recall how abortions were performed by injecting a saline solution into the womb to kill the baby, which was then suctioned out in small pieces. It was the attending nurse's duty to reassemble the parts to be certain they got it all.

One New York nurse, who had not yet been introduced to the new system at her hospital, told of opening the wrong door and finding a tiny newborn lying naked on a cold table. All the skin had been literally burned off its body.

It can't get any worse, right? Wrong! This was only the beginning of a nightmare that has led to "partial-birth" abortion, or as the Ohio doctor who perfected this extension of "a woman's right to choose..." calls it, "the Cadillac of abortion techniques."

Which is my advice to all office workers: I see a day when the Ten Commandments are displayed in Court Justices' spaces, or even a couple of hours, in one of America's many abortion chambers, then tell us whether or not you're supporting the right to choose or just you're just worried about how you feel about the harvesting and selling of aborted baby parts, which is now a lucrative business.
