Land, Stock, Crop

Pea culture has probably trebled in Barren county in the past two years. Our former friend of The Times claims to have cleared from $28 to $30 per acre from his pea crop last year, and with peas at $2 per bushel and threshed pea hay from $5 to $12 per ton, the claim is not unreasonable. With the tremendous demand for peas both as a hay and for food purposes, there is little danger of an overstocked market for many seasons to come.—Glasgow Times.

A remarkable phenomenon is reported from the neighborhood of Leather's Store, Anderson county. On the farm of Caleb Rout there are large numbers of grub worms. They are found by the hundreds in pastures and meadows and at the roots of the grass. This is not so unusual, but it is said that there are growing from the backs of these worms sprouts as if from some kind of seed. These sprouts have grown the length of six inches or more, and the people of that vicinity are expecting that they will grow into trees or shrubs, bloom and bear fruit before the season is over. This peculiar growth was examined microscopically by Prof. T. J. Leathers, of the Klondike School, and the pronounced it a fungus of some kind.—Anderson News.
