were going to have ideal Spring weather. The sun shined beautiful and the thermometer stood at 40. The old women commenced planning where they were going to plant their beans and how many chickens they would want to raise and even went so far as to sharpen up the old case knives to pick stagger weed (or greens). But on rising next morning a great change had taken place. The thermometer had dropped to 10 above. The earth was covered with inches of snow and as cold as Greenland. So we have learned that it will not do to build castles in the air and the best laid plans of men or mice are liable to get overthrown. Mr. and Mrs. R. H. of White Ky, are visiting the relatives. We are going to be long until you can longer the town of Livingston spoken of as the shelter town of the mountains.

SHERWOOD PENNSION BILL. Senator Bradley explains the whyfore and purposes of the bill in the Senate of the Sherwood Pension Bill. Washington, D. C., Feb. 26, 1912. A persistent effort is being made to suppress the Union Soldiers and Sailors Pension Bill. It is opposed to the passage of a pension bill in the Senate. The bill is a more miserable falsehood. Supplementing this, in certain directions it is being circulated that I killed the Sherwood Bill at the instance of Mr. Telford and also opposed to the passage of the bill. Those who know my long and consistent record as the Soldiers' friend will know this is a lie of whole cloth. Since I have been in the Senate I have procured the passage of more special pension bills than any three of my predecessors. I refer to a late instance when on February 1st, 1911 I reported favorably a bill (S. 5045) increasing the pensions of one hundred and ninety one soldiers among them a number from Kentucky. The Democrats in the lower house have never before shown themselves so devotedly and actively the friends of the soldiers. They knew the Sherwood Bill would never pass the Senate and it seems clear to my mind that their support of it in many instances was a political maneuver to obtain the soldiers' votes. The majority of the Democrats in the Senate are opposed to that bill as are also a majority of Republicans. Besides, the officers of the Grand Army of the Republic appeared before me and opposed it. In the first place, even had it for the purpose of political effect voted for its favorable report, there would have been an overwhelming majority against it. I did not care to play the favorites when I know I could not do so and a favorable report would most likely produce conditions which would lead to the defeat of any pension bill at the present session. The next bill proposed to be reported was the Hays Bill which carries an annual appropriation of $25,000,000 which would entail a cost of much less than the first year because of failure to have claims adjusted, but the second year would entail a cost of $40,000,000. After which time it would steadily decrease by $10,000,000 each year until the 1920th year when it would be $100,000,000 already in 1920th year the soldiers' annuity would be $100,000,000.
