Joe Jackson shot Richard Mason near Sinks, Sunday night, as the result of mistaken identity, imprudent acts, on the part of Mason and unwarranted fear on the part of Jackson. It was about 11 o'clock at night, when Jackson the second track operator at Sinks started to his home near Pine Hill and young Mason, who had started to Sinks to catch a train to go to his work at Winchester, met in the tunnel just a short distance from the Sinks office. Mason knew Jackson but Jackson did not know Mason. When only a few feet apart, Mason who was carrying a large stick under his arm, hit the stick down to his hand. Jackson thinking perhaps it was one of the same boys with whom he had had trouble a few nights before, and meant to do him injury took no chances, but pulled his revolver and began firing, without a word having been spoken. The ball struck Mason in the side producing what has been feared might prove a fatal wound. Soon as Jackson fired, Mason let himself fall. He knew and then it was that Jackson, after realizing what he had done and that he had shot his cousin, sorely grieved, he began to render every assistance possible to his unfortunate victim. Jackson flagged a freight train and took Mason to Livingston and had him cared for until he could be taken to Richmond. Jackson was arrested and held at Livingston for trial. A late report is to the effect that Mason is doing very nicely and will probably recover. It is a very unfortunately affair and no one is grieved half so much as Jackson, and while it may be said that he acted too hasty, yet no one thinks for a moment that the act was willful or that he did any thing more than what to him seemed necessary at the time. Young Mason said that Jackson was not to blame and that he (Mason) did not want Jackson prosecuted even though the injury proved fatal.

It is also to be considered that the opening of the Boone highway would offer a totally new and perfect touring route to the thousands of motorists of Indiana, Ohio, Illinois and Michigan, the greatest-motoring states in the Union.

These are the arguments in favor of Boone Way that occur to the outsider. To the writer, these arguments seem reasonable and logical.

Graded High School Notes.

The combining of the Langdon Memorial High School with the County High School has thus far proven very satisfactory. There are thirty-four pupils now enrolled in High School, and under the competent supervision of Miss Boyle, each one is doing very good work.

A great deal of interest is being taken in Chemistry and Physics, but comparatively little work can be done in these studies without a good laboratory. It is hoped that the board will soon make provisions along this line.

In the athletic field, basket ball seems to be most prominent. The first team of the boys, with Logan Bryant as captain, is expecting to play several match games with other schools during the season. The girls' team is also improving rapidly and will be in good trim to play with one of the neighboring schools.

The Literary Society was organized last week with Jamie Thompson, Pres., Homer Proctor, Vice-Pres., Robert McKenzie, secretary and Miss Rowley, critic.

The number of pupils in the Mt. Vernon Graded School has increased until there is no room for a child. The total enrollment in the grade is 243.

and first grade; Miss McFerron, second; Mr. John B. Henderson, fourth and fifth grades; and Mrs. Fishback sixth, seventh, and eighth.

A prize has been offered to the best pupil in each grade at the end of the year. The points of the decision will be divided as follows: scholarship 25, deportment 20, application 25, improvement 20, neatness 10, attendance 10, and punctuality 10. It has been planned thus to give each child a real opportunity of winning the prize.

On Monday morning, Brothers Tinsley and Duke gave helpful chapel talks.

Mr. Van Winkle took "Fools" as his subject for a chapel talk on Tuesday morning.

The pupils were much interested in Miss McFerron's account of her visit to St. Augustine, the oldest town in America, and especially in the real alligator she displayed.

Was elected Junior Warden of this lodge December 27th, 1851 the same month in which he was made a Master Mason and served the lodge as worshipful master several terms; was a Royal and select master and had the good of the lodge always at heart.

Therefore, Be it resolved: That in his death this lodge, has lost a true and faithful member, the community a good and upright citizen; his family a kind and loving father. That we extend our sympathy to his bereaved family that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our lodge. A copy sent to his bereaved family and a copy sent to the Mt. ### COUGHT A BAD COLD

"Last winter my son caught a very bad cold and the way he coughed was something dreadful," writes Mrs. Sarah E. Duncan, of Tipton, Iowa. "We thought sure he was going into consumption. We bought just one bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and that one bottle stopped the cough and cured his cold completely."

A SCIENTIST asserts that with the aid of instruments of a portable character it will soon be possible for a young man to discover the aura of his immorata and in so doing to infallibly read her mind to words himself. If he is but wise enough to suggest the cream or caramel before he makes the test he ought to be gratified with the results.

In early conditions are in favorable the plant becomes starved and stunted. That is a fact that every gardener and farmer knows. The same is true of the human plant. If the conditions affecting a child are depressing and unfavorable it is well nigh impossible for it to be anything but stunted in mind body and character.

BUSINESS, professional men and citizens generally, along the route of the old Wilderness Road are awaking to the importance of the proposed improvement of it into a National Highway and are getting to work.

In very many cases parents are responsible for the lack of character that appears in their children. They exert little if any discipline, care nothing about their moral training, and set a mighty poor example. What can be expected of children that come from such homes?

THE Lexington Herald says its time for calling the attention to the people that Kentucky needs a new constitution and that the next legislature should get busy in arranging details for calling a constitutional convention.

He who says, "I can't," when some difficulty presents itself is usually deficient in will power. The man with a strong will, undauntedly exclaims, "I can and will," and almost invariably does it.

In deciding to have the Mullan charges investigated in public Congress has done well. Secret sessions would have aroused suspicion of star chamber methods.

SENATOR BRADLEY introduced a Boone Way bill in Congress on September 15th a copy of which can be found in this issue of the Signal.

GEO. V. STEER, the noted writer is doing valiant work for Boone Way in connection with our secretary and members of Commercial Club.

If any one wants to feel good let him do good. There is nothing helping others, to produce that desirable condition.

SOME friends, like sundials, are are no good except when the sun shines; others are good in cloud as well as sunshine.

CONGRESS AND BOONE WAY
 James Maret, Secretary, has received from Senator Bradley a copy of the bill that was introduced in the Senate last week.

Authorizing an appropriation and expenditure to make a survey and prepare an estimate of the cost of the construction of a macadamized post road from Crab Orchard, Kentucky, to Cumberland Gap, in said State, said road to be known as "The Boone Way."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay that amount to the Secretary of Agriculture, which amount or so much thereof as may be necessary

the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to expend in procuring to be made a survey and estimate of cost by competent engineers of the construction of a macadamized post road fifteen feet wide, with proper grade, bridges, culverts, cuts, fills, and so forth, having a compact depth of eight inches of stone in center and extending on either side from the center to six inches depth of stone along the route of what was once known as "The Wilderness Turnpike," except where it may be necessary to change the same in order to lessen the grade or shorten the length thereof, from Crab Orchard, Kentucky, to Cumberland Gap, in said State; the said road when so constructed to be known as "The Boone Way."

GOOD ROADS SOME MORE AND THEN SOME

Much has been said—much need be said about "Good Roads." Surely one hundred yards of "loop paths" "bridge paths" etc. do not give way to real good roads, and why not? Because, and again because, people have not yet become convinced that the best interests of a neighborhood, a county or a State depends largely upon its facilities for transportation, travel and commercial intercourse.

Vehicles on wheels moved or drawn by horses or motors, are the chief dependence for transportation, and these are rendered helpless, or cannot be profitably used on the scalled roads that zig zag, up hill and down over crags, and crevices, canyons and precipices, all over the country.

People who undertake to move crops or coal or lumber over such roads, do so often at risk to their life or the safety of the team. What does it profit any way if a man shall punish himself and team all summer in order to provide feed for his team, and the rest of his wagon and gear?

Men: even when they are in favor of good roads. Are they Ask the majority of such, How many are you in favor of good roads? Are you willing to be taxed according to your worth for your good roads, to include only your own county or your own magisterial district. You know what the answer and the argument has heretofore been. This is not written with a view of springing the question of a Bond Issue. It is intended as a sober non-partisan appeal to the calm judgment of people who really want to better their's and every one else's opportunity for making an honest living.

The subject of good roads is a live, burning issue, not new either. It dates back, at least to a time when all of Kentucky was practically a forest with nothing better than Indian and deer paths. Nothing but "Boone's Tracks" was then known so far as the writer is informed existed in some parts of Kentucky. Twelve years after Kentucky became a State, a movement was inaugurated, looking to the construction of highways at national government expense. It was in 1826 when Ohio was admitted as a State that Congress incorporated in the act of admission a provision that 5 per cent of the proceeds of public land in that state should be employed in building highways.

In a Subsequent article the writer proposes to give a brief history of road making in a National State and State expense. It is hoped, that out people will be able to see how our national prosperity is hampered by the wretched condition of the things we call roads.

MOTHER OF EIGHTEEN CHILDREN

"I am the mother of eighteen children and have the praise of doing more work than any young woman in my town," writes Mrs. C. G. Martin, Boone Mill, Va. "I suffered for five years with stomach trouble and could not eat as much as a biscuit without suffering. I have taken three bottles of Chamberlain's Tablets and am now a well woman and over 100 pounds. I can now eat anything I want to, and as much as I want and feel better than I have at any time in my life." For the name of one in Boone Mill or vicinity they will vouch for "how easy" Chamberlain's Tablets are for all ailments.

BOONE WAY

A PROPOSED NATIONAL HIGHWAY CUMBERLAND GAP, TO CRAB ORCHARD, KY.

By GEORGE V. STEER.

The national aspect and significance of the proposed Boone Way is one element of the value of the memorial highway which has not been largely discussed and does not seem to be widely understood. It may not be out of place, therefore, for an outsider, conversant with the present highways agitation, to discuss this feature of the development and to present to the residents of the districts to be traversed the arguments in favor of Boone Way which occur to people and especially to automobile interests, located at a distance from the prospective route.

There are three distinct elements of value in the building of a road such as Boone Way is to be, each of which can be considered separately. These are:

- 1.—The local value, comprising the direct benefit to the persons and communities located on the proposed route.
- 2.—The value to adjacent and nearby counties, especially relating to the rapid development of subsidiary highways.
- 3.—The value of the road to adjacent territory as a result of its place in the national highway and touring system.

The local value of the Boone Way is already well understood by the people living in and near the territory to be traversed. At least, the writer feels safe in assuming that practically all parties in the territory appreciate the advantage of having a good road on which to reach their distributing centers. Arguments on this score is therefore unnecessary.

The value to counties and districts lying near, but not actually on the route of the proposed highway is probably not so well understood. On this score, it is only necessary to point to all of the districts of the United States where highway building has been begun. It has been the experience of practically every such section that, once the first trunk line is built, the increased realty value and prompt increase in business inevitably leads to the rapid development of subsidiary or branch roads, diverging from the main line at each community on the main line to each other, communally located within striking distance. This development is invariably uniform, and wherever trunk lines have been constructed in this country, the branch lines have extended in all directions until the territory, usually bare of any good highways in the first place, soon becomes "grid-ironed" with paved pikes.

As far as the arguments thus far presented are concerned, the road is simply a necessity and is of little or no interest to outsiders. However, the question inevitably arises, "what part does this road play in the national or interstate system of highways and routes?" If it does not connect with the main thoroughfares, or does not approach the more distant public, the road then remains purely a local issue and must be developed wholly at the expense of the local interests. On the other hand, if the road affords a great scenic and historical appeal and does connect with the main traveled thoroughfares, it then becomes an interstate or national issue, a source of interest to the distant public and an eventual source of continuous income from through traffic. Under these conditions, also, the promoters of builders of such a road have a legitimate and effective ground upon which to appeal for financial support to the national or distant interests.

The proposed Boone Highway, in the writer's opinion, offers the most effective and attractive link in the American touring system that is under consideration anywhere in the United States at the present time. The national highway conditions which will be discussed in the following paragraphs will show the grounds upon which this opinion is based.

In the first place, the country has not any effective route connecting the north and the south at the present time. The routes which connect the east and west, while satisfactory as far as mere travel conditions are concerned, nevertheless do not traverse territory of any especial scenic or historical interest.

The touring system of the east and south approaches Kentucky thru North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia as far as Cumberland Gap or Middlebrook. The touring system of the north reaches on long, and rather desolate routes to Kentucky as far as Crab Orchard Springs. Between these two points there is practically nothing as far as roads are concerned. But this short hundred miles of territory contains the most intensely interesting atmosphere in the eastern half of America, if not in the entire country. The scenery is unsurpassed, having the most romantic of any section of the nation.

The completion of the road from Cumberland Gap to Crab Orchard Springs would therefore connect the two great touring systems, the great highway systems of the country, thru the Kentucky mountains, and afford the most interesting and altogether attractive link in the entire chain of roads.

The value of the route may be seen in additional light from another point of view which, at first reading may seem rather far-fetched, but which is in reality entirely reasonable. In the location of the Lincoln Highway, the great national coast to coast route from New York to San Francisco, the engineers originally planned to go from Pittsburgh, through Columbus, Ohio, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Kansas City, thence to Denver. However, the discussion of this route raised so much jealousy in the cities that were missed, such as Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, and Chicago on the north, and Cincinnati, Louisville and Evansville on the south, that the tentative route was abandoned. The route actually chosen, it passes from Pittsburgh to Denver, half way across the continent, without touching a single large city and all of the way through territory of very doubtful interest. Especially, from the Illinois line, across northern Indiana and central Ohio the route is barren and uninteresting, and from Pittsburgh east the route runs its way through a bank of coal soil and the glare of coke ovens.

The Lincoln highway association, incidentally, has practically agreed to build a subsidiary route thru Indianapolis and Louisville to Bardonia, Hagenstein, the Lincoln Farm and Mammoth Cave. It has been unofficially indicated that this route may be varied through Lebanon to Crab Orchard Springs. However, splendid touring pikes are already in existence from the line of the Lincoln highway at the Lincoln border, thru Indianapolis to Louisville, and there is a fairly good pike to service from Louisville to Crab Orchard.

Considering the intense scenic and historical interest of the Kentucky route in contrast to the barrenness of the northern system, it is a safe assumption that the completion of the Boone Way link from Crab Orchard Springs to Cumberland Gap, will swing the trend of transcontinental and interstate touring from the main route of the Lincoln highway south to the route of greatest interest.

To the great bulk of motorists, and there are hundreds of thousands of them all over the roads, the choice of routes would be made without the least hesitation. From the east, the route of choice is undeniably that of a rough the wonderful valleys of old Virginia to the mountains of Tennessee, and then on to the Lincoln

A Virginian Speaks Of Mr. Maret And His Work

Mr. Robt. L. Pennington of Jonesville, Lee county, Virginia, is a prominent attorney, bank and hotel owner and a man who was instrumental in having the first seven miles of torgpike built in results of which there are many and more building. Mr. Pennington is an original good roads man.

Jonesville, Virginia, Sept. 23, 1913.

Editor Mt. Vernon Signal, Mt. Vernon, Ky.

Dear Sir: I am informed that your fellow townsmen Mr. James Maret, is a candidate for County Court Clerk of your county. I may seem strange that a man living so far away as I do in the State of Virginia, would be interested in who would be the County Clerk of your most excellent County, but, however strange it may appear, I am, and hope it will not be out of place for me to say a word in behalf of Mr. Maret.

While I am a Virginian at the same time I am half Kentuckian because my mother was from the great State of Kentucky. I am interested in Kentucky for another reason, she is a daughter of Virginia. I am interested in her because she has been a great State and has played a prominent part in the making of the great Nation of which we all are proud. I have known Mr. Maret thru his efforts as a public spirited citizen, a man whose efforts has reached out beyond the confines of his own County and whose influence has even reached beyond the borders of his own state in the monumental task at which he has been working in securing a national highway between the turn pikes of Kentucky and Cumberland Gap Tennessee, and Virginia. This work on the part of Mr. Maret has been a work of labor and love, and to which I understand he has given his time and attention without compensation. We cannot all ways work a good horse, and not feed it. If we did, we will soon find that his strength is gone and life is extinct. Men like Mr. Maret who has the courage and who has an interest in his country and his community to give of his time toward its upbuilding, is the character of man that should be honored with those compensatory offices which place him in a greater and better position to do service for his country. He gets a living from the office and gives it back to the people in public service. Mr. Maret has been a man of great force as, already, he has been able to interest Governors, Senators, Congress-men Clubs, Chambers of Commerce, and Boards of Trade all over the country in the great and laudable work of making our nation's highways which fact is positive proof of his ability and of his energy to properly fill the Office which he seeks. Besides, as stated above, placing him in the position which he as the people, gives to him sustenance and enables him to put more of his time, energy, and coght into this great public spirited work.

When the people have an opportunity to award a public spirited servant like Mr. Maret has been, they are not doing their duty, in my judgment, when they turn aside from him merely for the reason that he does not happen to be of their particular political brand of politics. I believe that we should reward men for what they do and not merely for what they profess. I know nothing of the comparative merit of Mr. Maret's opponent, but to know that he would have to be a very self-sacrificing and public spirited man to deserve more merit than does Mr. Maret. Thanking you for space in your paper which gives me an opportunity to say a word in behalf of one so deserving, I am,

Yours very truly,
 ROBT L. PENNINGTON.
