DOANS PILLS

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, along with their wide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of their popularity and the confidence of the able physician in their use. Doan's is the best-selling of all medicines.

Then physicians, too, approve every word of all advertisements for Doan's Pills, which is only to recommend Doan's Pills to the best of their knowledge and for the good of the kidney function and for relief of all ailments.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys are the most important organs of the body, which cannot stay in the blood without injury, it is likely that the whole body would be more free from ailments.

Doan's Pills are the best-selling of all medicines because of the confidence of the able physician in their use. Doan's is the best-selling of all medicines because of the confidence of the able physician in their use.

Mud is the chief cry, which has nearly blocked the roads to the mines in this part, which causes slack work for the miners. If we could only get some assistance on a good road, as we have the material to complete the road, limestone and firm road beds, free rights of ways, in great quantities, other material which is probably needed for the Defense of our country.

Good Citizens... Wherever We Serve

GOOD citizens of any community are those who contribute toward its welfare and progress.

In this respect, Southeastern Greyhound Lines is proud of its role of "good citizen" in the hundreds of communities and among the millions of people it serves.

To its "fellow citizens" in these communities, it provides the finest of transportation to men on business, children to school, shoppers to town, defense workers to factories, service men to camps and home. Its service to them is economical; its buses are well maintained and comfortable; its schedules are frequent; and its drivers have won national safety awards for many consecutive years.

In hundreds of communities, buses provide the only public transportation; on many routes, they carry U. S. Mail; on nearly all routes, they speed delivery of newspapers; on EVERY ROUTE and in EVERY BUS, the daily life of America is being served beneficially and well.

In all respects, we believe that Greyhound and its employees qualify as good citizens in your community... substantial contribution to the welfare and progress of your city. We like to feel that you think so, too.

Out of every dollar you pay for a Southeastern Greyhound bus ticket, 23-1/3c goes just for taxes!

United Nations Rush Reinforcements To Far East Battle Fronts in Effort To Check Spreading of Jap Attacks; Nazis Again Take Offensive in Africa

(EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the writers and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

(Revised by Western Newspaper Union.)

Somewhere in the Pacific ocean, this dramatic picture shows U. S. Navy offensive patrol plane carrier being bombed by enemy bombers as it begins its anti-submarine duties. Note in the picture that on both the side and underpart of the plane there were certain parts and insignia which might give information to the enemy. Also on the top rigging of the carrier you will notice further details for the same reason.

LUZON:

Epic Battle

Threatened as an epic of warfare that would live in all history, the defense of Bataan peninsula and of the fortresses holding the entrance to Manila Bay has been diversing large Jap forces needed elsewhere than in the Philippines.

The adding to MacArthur's embattled and smoke-battered army of a battalion of amphibious tank machines was welcome news and showed that perhaps not all of the men of Cavite and Olongapo had been withdrawn, but that they had been given a post of honor with the defenders.

Up on the Mariveles mountains they were entrenched, and no matter what strength the Japs hurled against them they were holding firm. On one moonlit night a whole regiment of small boats moved down the coast, using the same tactics that had hurled the British back on Malaya.

The effort was to get in on MacArthur's flank and confuse the defenders. At the same time, for an attack on the weak flank. On the shore defenders and anti-aircraft opened up on the Jap invaders, left scores of them struggling in the water, and the few that ashore were quickly mopped up by the Filipinos.

There was apparently at least one Japanese warship which managed to run through the eight-mile strip of mines between the fortresses at the entrance of Manila Bay. One of the United States' intrepid torpedo boat squadrons, piloting his tiny craft at close to 80 miles an hour, dived down on the intruder, and launched two torpedoes which struck the ship. "She is believed to have been sunk."

The attack was carried out directly into the glare of the warship's searchlights, and under the full power of her guns, but so skillfully did its skipper maneuver that she was not struck, and escaped with all hands to tell the tale.

WAVELL:

And Reinforcements

The statement by General Wavell that "great reinforcements" were to arrive, and calling on the Singapore defenders to "dig in to the rear, which was defended" was more than a little significant.

Tobruk was the bastion that held out for months despite being surrounded on three sides by Axis forces anxious to wipe it out, and finally was relieved by the allied winter drive.

Wavell's statement to the Singapore army smacked of a situation which might see sufficient reinforcements sent to Malaya to do something, not only to relieve the garrison, but send the Japanese on the run again.

Whether this reinforcement was going to be sent to Singapore itself, or whether a method was to be found of striking at the rear of the East Indies would immeasurably be weakened if this was to happen, hence Wavell's strong appeal to the city's defenders to hold out at all costs.

SINKINGS:

Continuing Heavy

Since our entrance into the war, two navy tankers had been torpedoed, the first managing to reach Iceland under her own power, but the second one, Neches, was sunk down with a reported estimated loss of 58 men, with 126 men escaping to fight again.

The location of the Neches' torpedoing was not immediately announced by the navy, but ship losses had been small in the Pacific since Pearl Harbor, more than halved two to one by Allied sinkings of Jap ships.

There were growing reports of Allied naval strength in the Pacific, showing that increasing numbers of ships were active in those waters, and in one case having carried the attack to the Japanese-held Marshall and Gilbert Islands, generally in the Australia defense zone, with terrific results.

In this action, though no strictly war vessels of Nippon were sunk, the navy reported several auxiliaries were sunk and damaged, which might include tankers, transports, supply ships used for naval purposes.

The Jap forces lost 11 planes but no ships showed that probably one of our aircraft carriers was in the neighborhood and that a vessel of this size was being used in a task force offensive action demonstrated that Admiral Nimitz was keeping up getting even with Japan off Pearl Harbor.

RUSSIA:

Buying Insurance

The Russians, having fought the Germans back considerably past their announced "winter line" in the northern sectors, might be said to be buying insurance against the Nazis' spring drive.

Some observers, including Senator Byrd, in addresses had warned that the Germans had some 100 divisions of soldiers that they had been holding out of action, just for the spring offensive, might be said to be buying insurance against the Nazis' spring drive.

The Red armies were not, however, likely to be losing anywhere nearly as heavily on the whole front as were the Germans, so that victory, even though temporary, was expected to stand them in good stead when the time comes to hang on after May.

Experience of 1940 and 1941 was that the Russian winter would not break until about that time, to any appreciable degree, and at that point the Germans might be expected to launch another all-out attack.

The Red armies were well into Smolensk province, reporting that the Germans, instead of fighting holding actions, were now hastily moving back to better fortified lines, and trying at all costs to save as much material and as many men as possible.

It was considered probable that the Russians would be able, before the coming of spring, to shove the Germans at least back to Smolensk, thus driving the Nazis 200 miles to cover in reaching Moscow again, a distance that the Russians had already fought over twice, once going and once coming, and which the would defend even more stubbornly than the first time.

INSURANCE:

On War Damage

The senate, by passing a bill giving owners of property free insurance up to $15,000 for war damage, showed that it is willing to stir further to eventual victory in the war.

Valentine Ideas are practical for the celebration of anniversaries even after St. Valentine's day is past.

Recently I saw an anniversary celebration at which a cranberry mold was used. Cranberry jelly cut in heart shapes was placed around the big mold.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

If clothes are well hung after laundering, ironing will be easier.

Blainless steel utensils have to be heated slowly over a low flame or the foods being cooked in them will scorch.

In planning meals, bacon should be considered as fat rather than meat, because it contains very little protein.

A pinch of salt added to very sour soups will greatly reduce the quantity of sugar needed to sweeten them.

When steaming pudding always have the water boiling. It should come up to at least two inches from the top of the mold.

DEEP WATER ISLAND

by ALAN LEMAY

W-V-U-RELEASE

INSTALLMENT SIX
THE STORY SO FAR: Karen Water- son, con- gered by her lawyer, John Coll, that she has a claim to the island of Honolulu to attempt to gain control of the property. There is a strange circumstance and somewhat against her will she ends herself on the very island, Alaska, with Richard Wayne or Tonga Dick, as he is known. He is a member of the Wayne family since the disappearance of her grandfather. They have found that Dick's name is James Wayne, who has been managing the property. It is very sick. Dick tries to get Karen to marry him, but she refuses. Later, during the night, a native house girl comes to Dick's room and tells him she has a strange forbidden of evil. At they talk a rap to the bird at the door.

Now continue with the story.

At the door when Dick opened it was the tiny figure of a kimonoed Japanese girl. Her hair, usually as neat as polished ebony, was down all about her face, and through it her eyes, stared so widely that they showed the whites.

"Mister Dick— you come!"

"What is it? What is it now?"

"I tap on Mister Wayne door—I take Mister Wayne's name. Mister Wayne, he not answer."

"Who, did you go in?"

"No, no, no!"

"Where is he in his office?"

"Yes—office. Plenty light but no speak. Something moves in there—I hear something move! But nothing in there will speak."

Dick Wayne drew a deep breath, and the air of the hall was so clammy upon his lungs that it felt as if he had breathed in the cold rain.

"All right."

Once more he went through the door, through the house, the broad old floorboards speaking under his tread, and the tabs of the Japanese girl's kimono were seen.

There was a line of light under the door of James Wayne's office; but as he reached for the latch the Japanese girl flitted in, pressed against the wall, fearful lest she accidentally see into the room, and Tonga Dick—Wayne himself—hesitated. He knew what was in mind.

James Wayne sat in the chair behind his vast desk, in the same place he had sat during the past twenty hard driving years. But now his head was forward upon the desk, and by the slack emptiness of his uncle's chair, Dick knew that this was the end.

Over the floor were scattered the ginger blossoms of a garden at home. When Dick Wayne had made certain that his uncle was dead, he picked up the scattered ginger blossoms, and, opening a case, he threw them out into the night.

He went to the door. The Japanese girl looked smaller than ever, standing there with her back pressed tight against the oak-wood wall, as if trying to hide herself from things unseen. "Send the Missey here," he said.

"Missey Liliua?"

"No, not 'The Haole Missey.'"

"Yes, Mister Dick."

"As soon as you have sent the haole Missey to me, bring me Charles Wang."

As Dick turned back into the room he spotted one more of those inescapable ginger flowers under the corner of the desk. He picked it up and put it in his pocket. Then he went and stood at the window, looking out into blackness, unmindful of the cold spit of the rain. It seemed to him a long time before Karen came.

"Is something wrong?" Her words were faltering. "Has anything happened?"

Dick Wayne started, astonished. Deep in his pocket his fingers were still rolling between them the petals of that last ginger flower; but Karen's eyes were uncommunicative and he saw that she did not so much as glance at the floor to make sure that the flowers were gone. Suddenly a terrible pity for this girl got the better of him and he shut his jaws.

"Dick," Karen cried out, "what is it?"

He was unable then, pitying her as he did, to tell her that he knew she already had the answer to that. "James Wayne is dead," he answered.

"This—is this a terrible thing?"

"Perhaps not."

"What do you mean?"

"Dick's voice was hard and bitter. "If you are going to take this island, perhaps it is better that you take it from me and from my brothers— not from the man who made it what it is."

Karen Waterston stared at him blankly. Until now it had seemed to Dick Wayne that nothing he had ever said to her had reached her completely in its full meaning; but now he knew that she had "rattled" as definitely as he had struck her across the chest. The silence that followed had a strange hopeless quality about it, empty, yet singularly acute. Dick was glad that Charles Wang now appeared, moving quickly into the room.

Charles Wong went straight to the desk, but his eyes were questioning on Dick's face.

"Yes," Dick answered the unspoken question.

A wave of swift emotion crossed the Chinese secretary's face; he raised one hand and his fingers ran through his heavy hair.

Charles Wong went straight to the desk . . . "Yes," Dick answered the unspoken question.

"Get the doctor on the phone; get him up here at once. That is necessary for the proper report when this is done, get my brothers in Honolulu on the wireless phone; tell them what has happened; and that I will be in Honolulu tomorrow night, regardless of whether they will be here by then or not. Then get me John Coll; I think you already know where in Honolulu he is."

"And—what shall I tell him?"

"I'll talk to him myself."

The Holokai did not weigh her words. She took the next day, but as she beat her way stowily out through the reefs, half an hour after sunset, Dick Wayne was glad that she was gone.

Tonga Dick had respected and admired his uncle, had understood what his uncle meant to Alaska. Everything productive that Alaska possessed had existed first in this one man's mind. They had all depended upon him, they had all been guided by him; all of them except Dick himself had been controlled by him.

A careful conference had been necessary with James Wayne's physician. Being already familiar with the case, he had no trouble describing, in technical terms, the failure of James Wayne's heart.

"Could this have been caused by shock?" Dick demanded.

"No," Shimazu said with an oddly humless luctation, "would not have been necessary; but it would have helped."

Dick Wayne experienced no relief at this declaration. He was certain that Karen Waterston had been with James Wayne when he died, and he had thought to conceal this. And he knew that almost anyone else, knowing these facts, would leap at once to a dark and savage suspicion. He found, however, that for himself he did not need Dr. Shimazu's report; he was already convinced by any shadow of present or future doubt, that Karen Waterston had not killed James Wayne.

When they had communicated with Dick's brothers and with John Coll, Tonga Dick Wayne threw the radio cut-off switch.

What remained was a full day with Charles Wang, repeatedly interrupted by the visits of cane field bosses, mill superintendents, cattle raisers. It was but a dark fore- boding, that Dick and Karen Waterston at last drove steeply down the mountain toward the anchorage of the Holokai.

Later, after the Holokai had put out from shore, Dick and Karen sat themselves sitting face to face across a completely set table under the cabin's skylight. The main cabin of the Holokai was trim and well lighted, it was but a very small here not even the hovering of the Chinese mess boy could spare them a sense of being shut in, very close together.

Karen's eyes rested unhapily upon her plate. Her fork fiddled with broiled pork, but she was unable to eat. Her clear-cut pose had returned in the form of a reticent withdrawal, but behind the thin shell of her armor was a very strong desire to perceive that the girl was nervously distraught.

Then reason, Dick Wayne ate, for no other reason than that he had not eaten in more than eighteen hours, and said nothing for Karen to speak. Now, surely, he thought, she would have something to say about her presence at the death of James Wayne.

Then presently he became aware, and not knowing very much, that was not going to speak. She must have known who had picked up the broken ginger blossoms; this would have given her away. But did she? Dick suddenly recognized that Karen perhaps did not know.

He let his eyes rest with some deliberation upon her face, and saw that she was uncommunicative; it gave her an exceptionally fragile look, and she began to say, "That you might tell me."

He let the question be had begun lowly, in the bleak face of the sea past the porthole.

"We're making fast time," he said. "We'll be in Honolulu before very long."

Karen murmured, "I'm glad." A little shiver ran across her shoulders, so that, her two words made

CHAPTER VII

Karen looked at him steadily a moment.

"There isn't any reason why I should answer that," she said at last. "But I will. I have no intention of marrying John Coll! What I mean is that I believe I have a sound claim, and I am perfectly willing that the court should try it. If your uncle had lived—"

She stopped, and a silence fell between them. She was trying to say the voice of the ship as the rain and the slap of the sea. Later, Tonga Dick began, talking to her again, trying to tell her what his uncle had been, as Dick saw him.

He was trying to make her see a man who had lived not for personal conquest, but for a dream. He was trying to make her understand that James Wayne had been a man who did not know very much, but who was not going to speak. She must have known who had picked up the broken ginger blossoms; this would have given her away. But did she? Dick suddenly recognized that Karen perhaps did not know.
