A chocolate pie will take on a new flavor if left-over coffee is substituted for half the milk.

A stick of cinnamon broken into the milk beaten into custards gives the custards a faint cinnamon color but does not darken them.

If the surface of your stove looks rough, it probably is due to an accumulation of stove blacking. Sandpaper rubbed over the surface will make it as smooth as when new.

Have a brush especially for scrubbing pastry boards and tables. Wash and wipe dry, and be sure not to allow the dough to accumulate in the cracks.

Try cooking beet greens with bacon. After boiling, the bacon is crisp in frying pan and served with slices of hard-boiled eggs as a border around greens.

Coffeepots need thorough washing, scouring, rinsing and air-drying. Clean the spout with a stiff paint brush, frequently dipping in sanding powder, and then rinse in quantities of boiling water. Repeat until dry. Air the pot in the sun at least once a week.

The problem of what to send a service man has been solved by the men themselves. Tobacco tops the list of gifts service men prefer from the folks back home, according to mailing statistics. If you have a friend or relative in the armed forces—Army, Navy, Marines, or Coast Guard—who smokes a pipe or rolls his own, a pound of his favorite tobacco is very much in order. A big favorite with many service men is Prince Albert, the world's largest-selling smoking tobacco. Local dealers now are featuring Prince Albert in the pound can for the men in the service. Adv.

Facts and Stories

By Ralph Griffin

Among the early Rockcastle schools was one at Oak Hill and the first teacher was a man named William Dollen. Whether or not Mr. Dollen was a gentleman we have no way of knowing, but he has left positive evidence...

That he was a scholar. There are no arithmetic text books available, this early teacher made his own. His book is still in existence, quite legible and simple proof that a scholar was at work and a mathematician as well. The problems are well arranged and well thought out, the writing done in longhand, of course with ink which was doubtless manipulated with a quill. The borders are artistically decorated and the entire work demonstrates that this teacher was a scholar.

The earliest schools of the county were few and far between. All of them were of the subscription type, the student bearing such a proportion as the parents could afford to contribute to the whole number instructed. Books were scarce and the only volumes of hymns, Bible, Pilgrim's Progress and an occasional almanac. Geography and arithmetic were almost entirely unknown (with an exception), and were complicated still further by being expressed in doggerel verse.

Reading and spelling were taught from whatever books there happened to be available and words were spelled by syllables. Each syllable was spelled, and spelled, until the child was able to read the whole word. This being rapidly added to the sum total in a manner completely confusing to the modern speller. Writing was not taught until the child was able to read and write with a pen, and required that the teachers be an expert in the making of quill-pens. There was little orderly progression and few pupils beyond the primary and secondary grades.

The schoolhouse was a one-room log structure without a chimney, with a big open fireplace; backless benches were strung around the wall and very frequently there was no light or ventilation except what came from the door or the fire-light. In summer a window was usually made by cutting out one entire log in the rear of the room, the opening being covered with a board which was fastened. This plank was intended to serve the whole school as a writing desk for the week. The desk served as a place to talk and "spark." In winter this log would be replaced, covered with greased paper.

The progress of education was delayed by the Civil War, but following that time several three months "free" schools were begun in the county. Children were sent to school on alternate days, for school "took up" at 7 a. m. and continued, with short interruptions, until 5 p. m. The Blue Back-Speller was the standard by this time and usually served as a reader as well. Lessons were sung in a high-pitched key, with some rhyme perhaps, a hand organ, understanding or melody. Pupils and teachers who took their work seriously studied thru the long evenings at home by the aid of a candle, a lamp, a pie-knot or the light from the mammoth fire place.

A caste of teachers was eventually developed, the older and older pupils, the usual requirement for teaching being the ability to spell thru the Blue Back-Speller and to work thru the primer. The teacher's pay was somewhat less than $1 per capita for the 3 months period. Among the best remembered of the early teachers was Prof. (as he was known) S. P. Storr, an eccentric old fellow who taught forty-nine free school children in so far as he could before old age and ill health intervened. His methods of teaching differed somewhat from the average for he permitted his pupils to read, study and carry on conversation in ordinary tones during school hours. He prided himself upon being able to make himself heard above the bedlam and insisted that his method taught concentration as well as the three R's. He did for the first time, possibly bringing the idea with him from Germany. These exhibitions were held for one and all and were attended by the crowds which gathered in for miles around.

Somewhat after the manner of the modern amateur shows, the performance consisted of grown-ups as well as children. There were dancing, dancing, fiddling, banjo picking and recitations. The recitations were usually done in a close, tight circle with dialogue and fiddling. Will Albright fiddled "Dear Walt" the crowd could not contain themselves and thought they would tear that house down, for sure.

Fred Mahaffey, upon his tambourine, and Joe Spurr, with his banjo, seem to have stolen the show, with Will Albright and "Babe" Houk running close behind. The boys worked with dialogue and fiddling. Will Albright fiddled "Dear Walt" the crowd could not contain themselves and thought they would tear that house down, for sure.

Lee Roy McClure Wins Top Honors at 4-H District Meeting at London

Lee Roy McClure, president of the 4-H Club and Vice-President of the County 4-H Association, won first place in the District 4-H Demonstration contest with poultry culling. Lee Roy will not only represent Rockcastle but the entire district of nine counties at the state contests next week at the Kentucky State Junior Week which starts June 1st.

Our Quail 4-H farm team, consisting of Lee Gentry and Leo Reynolds and a pair of the red ribbon group, was placed in the blue ribbon group with poultry culling. The Quail 4-H Home Practice team, consisting of Ruth and Wanda Brown, was placed in the blue ribbon group with poultry culling. Lois Reynolds, Wildlife club, was placed in the red ribbon group with poultry culling.

Berea 4-H Club farm practice team consisting of Carl Dean and Russell Parsons, with a woodwork demonstration, was placed in the red ribbon group. Addie Parker, Big Hill 4-H Club, was placed in the blue ribbon group with poultry culling. These winnings and placings in the blue and red ribbon groups in a district contest shows that we have some fine boys and girls. Lee's home 4-H club work and encourages its activities in every school and community.

The Fifth Sunday Meeting will be held at Pine Hill Church beginning Sunday, June 10, at 8 o'clock, until 3:15 P. M. See program with May 24th issue of the Signal. Training Union-7:00 P. M., Mrs. F. W. Davis, Director. Exercises of the Sunday School and Church is expected to be present especially the teachers of our church.

Services Next Week Beginning Monday morning at 8:30 to 10:30 o'clock and continuing each week through the week. Those who will have our annual Vacation Bible School. Children between the ages of 4 and 17 are welcome. The following have promised to serve on the faculty: Mrs. J. T. Meadows, Mrs. Ella Mae Mullins, Mrs. Chas. Daley, Mrs. Delbert Parker, Mrs. Doley Abney, Mrs. W. C. Younce, Mrs. Estill Bullock, Mrs. Emma Pennington, Mrs. Celis Barnett, Mrs. Chas. Machal, Mrs. W. C. Younce, Mrs. Herbert Owens and Mr. Estill Bullock.

Jan. 40:31. "That which wait on the Lord shall renew their strength," may be paraphrased thus: "Those who attend the mid-week prayer service shall receive spiritual strength which is needed in meeting the everyday demands of life." It is the contention it may also be well to remember the words of Jesus, "I came not to be ministered unto but to minister," that is to make a contribution to the service.

We are glad to report that Mr. W. Mullins, of Berea, Franklin and Mrs. Wade Livesey have returned from the hospital. We want our people who are walking the streets to know that we sympathize with and shall remember them in our prayers.

Mr. Lester Baker is in the hospital at Lexington, getting along well. Ray Hysinger from Dayton, Ohio, spent the week-end here with his wife and little daughter. Rev. Wycoff will preach at Rose Hill Wednesday night, June 3rd, and show some pictures. Everyone is cordially invited.

Mrs. T. J. Nicely and Miss Nell Lewis, of Berea, spent Tuesday in Lexington. Mr. Jones Fish, a retired machanic, Mr. James B. Owens, Miss Mollie Parker, an attorney at law from Key West, Florida, were quietly married in the Woodland Christian Church of Lexington, Ky., at 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, May 28th. Rev. H. Y. Young, Pastor of the Church and former Pastor of the Church and Christian Church, officiated. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Fish left for Frankfort and Louisville. They will be at home in Mount Vernon after June first.

"Bubbling Over" Ready For Showing Tonight and Tomorrow at Livingston

"Bubbling Over" is ready for production for Thursday and Friday nights at High School Gym in Livingston, May 28 and 29. You will sure Bubble Over with laughter when you see Clyde Linnville impersonating Miss Lively played by Nina Dean Pike she is a former sweet heart of the Prince of the College who has not seen in 25 years and when Walter Chesnut and Clyde Linnville get better in their tittle and the mathematic teacher played by Margaret Linnville tries to collect their dues and they can't pay she tells they will be kicked out of college if they have to do something to raise the money as their fathers won't send them any more so they decide to start a Date Bureau and the Prof. won't let them run it unless they get a date for him with this former sweetheart of his which they promise to do and when they can't locate her then Clyde decides he will dress up as Miss Lively and you will sure laugh when you see him and the Prof. in their love scene. There are ten in the dramatic cast and 18 chorus girls and 26 grade school children in comedy song and plenty of good vaudeville and don't forget to vote for your favorite Tiny Tots there are 20 of them in the cast. The boxes are in Webb Cade's. Prices to the show are 15-25 and 35c tax included. This is being sponsored by the Lions Club.

Eugene Siler Is Candidate For Congress, 9th Dist.

Elsewhere in the columns of this paper we are carrying the political announcement of Eugene Siler, an attorney of Williamsburg, as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in the 9th District, including this county, subject to the primary of August 1st.

Mr. Siler called on our office today and stated that he has received great encouragement in various parts of the district of 17 counties and that he believes his undertaking will be successful. He stated that he has fact that he made a race over 8 of these same counties in 1940 and succeeded in carrying 6 of them over his 6 opponents including Honorable Flegm D. Sampson, former governor, who was defeated by Siler by a 2 to 1 vote in the District. In the Democratic landslide that followed Siler was defeated by Honorable Alex Ratliff, present Judge of the Court of Appeals.

Mr. Siler is 42 years of age, married and father of 4 children of school age. He is a veteran of World War I and former District Commander of the American Legion and has been active in church, civil and fraternal work in past years. He is opposed by Congressman J. M. Robinson, who is 69 years of age and who has already been in Congress more than 20 years. Mr. Siler stated that he would, if elected, be in favor of pensions for outgoing Congress members. He also stated he would not be an obstructionist or isolationist in Congress, but would support our efforts and our boys in the Army and Navy.

BOND SALES ADVANCE

It appears that we have almost reached our quota for May sales of Bonds and Stamps. We believe that this is good news for Rockcastle county, as our quota is rather large. We are having some trouble of getting cooperation from Government employees in this respect. We feel that if we do the work gratis that we should have full cooperation with every person drawing a salary from the United States and State of Kentucky. It will take cooperation of the whole citizenship to keep up with the demands in this war, and especially the ones that are on our rolls should be active in the work, not only giving 10 per cent, but assisting in every way possible to put our boys into action that is being put on by the Treasury Department.

M. Pennington, Chairman, War Savings Committee for Rockcastle County.

CONWAY HOMEMAKERS

The Conway Homemakers met with Mrs. Bell Taylor on Tuesday. Ten members were present. Mrs. Hatcher was the guest speaker on "The Deficiency of Calcium." A good meal was cooked and enjoyed by all. The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Myrtle Baker.

Publicity Chairman.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

RAF Reich Blitz Forecast of Invasion; Hoover Urges Greater Power for FDR; Soviets Push Ahead on Kharkov Front; U. S. Outlines Pay Deduction Tax Plan

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions were expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of this newspaper. Reprinted by Western Newspaper Union.

DOOLITTLE: Secrets Well Kept

Three questions remained unanswered when President Roosevelt pinned the Congressional Medal of Honor on the breast of Brigadier General Doolittle in his unheralded White House ceremony commemorating the recent history-making American bombers' raid on the Japanese mainland.

Where did daredevil Jimmy Doolittle's squadron take off from? Where did the tank tippers land after they bombed Tokyo and sowed a whirlwind of fire, death and destruction in their wake? By what route did Doolittle reach Washington?

While the mystery remained a well-kept secret, Doolittle, who had won international renown as a sometime speedster, once again exploited much of his America's No. 1 hero, revealed some significant facts.

Yanks outland and outland Japanese planes and retired without losing a single plane. They hedged back over Tokyo long enough to see a ball game progress. Yankee bombers played havoc with vital Japanese industrial areas 40 miles long and 6 to 40 miles wide.

They scored direct hits on a battleship or cruiser under construction near Tokyo and scattered incendiary bombs over airplane factories in Nagoya.

In extending Doolittle the nation's thanks, President Roosevelt announced the award of 79 Distinguished Service Crosses for the 79 volunteers—pilots, machine gunners, bombardiers and radomees—who participated in the raid.

HOOVER URGES: More Power for FDR

Former President Herbert Hoover urged that President Roosevelt be given additional "dictatorial economic powers" as a means of winning the total war.

"There must be no hesitation in giving them to President Roosevelt and upholding him in them," Mr. Hoover said in an address before the 20th Assembly of the National Industrial Conference board.

Economic dictatorship, however, must not encroach on civil liberties, he declared. "From a philosophical viewpoint," he said, he would like to see the "sixth column" given a little more liberty.

"Criticism of the conduct of the war is necessary if we are to win the war," he added. "We must be war on the right. Democracy can correct mistakes only through public exposure and opposition to them."

Mr. Hoover did not give specific details of the new dictatorial powers he advocated for President Roosevelt. He said, however, "We must start thinking with a cold, hard eye that the economic measures to win total war are just plain Fascist economics."

STEEL WORKERS: To Be 'Missionaries'

As his conflict with John L. Lewis for control of millions of American workers tightened, Philip Murray, president of the CIO, urged delegates who attended the Steel Workers' organizing committee convention at Cleveland, Ohio, to become "missionaries of national unity."

"I do not want internal strife in this union nor in the CIO," Murray said. "Men's minds must rise above internal bickering when the nation is embroiled in a world war."

NAZI FOOD RATIONS: To Be Smaller

Following series of conditions in Axis countries by diplomats and newspaper men released from internment in many and Italy came an announcement by Reich Marshal Herman Goering, war time Nazi economic commissioner, that a "temporary reduction in the food rations" of Germany would be necessary because of an unfavorable crop outlook.

MARSHAL GOERING: 'It's a hard war.'

Addressing 137 war workers assembled at the chancellery in Berlin for his troops, but he knew his for the first time in history, Goering said: "Three extremely hard winters are behind us. The elements have not been kind to us. Last year's harvest was bad. Now, however much we enjoy the warm sun, we are longing for rain to bring what the farmer needs."

Goering termed the present war "the hardest Germany has had to fight." "The winter campaign has been terrible. The Fuehrer suffered deeply for his troops, but he knew it must not yield. There was no question of giving up our front positions because behind us there was only a heap of ruins."

EARLIER VICTORY?: Maybe, Says Hull

Secretary of State Cordell Hull's cautious indication that increases in United Nations striking power might bring victory sooner than was formerly expected, brought comfort to many an American family and generated new optimism over the war effort in official Washington.

Mr. Hull had been asked as a press conference whether developments in recent weeks on the home and foreign fronts encouraged him to believe in an early victory. In reply he pointed out that the powers and facilities of the United States have been developing on a more and more massive scale, not only for offensive-defensive operations, but for outright offensive war.

Making no effort to disguise the fact that he is increasingly impressed by America's growing power, the half-haired secretary suggested it was only natural that calculations as to the duration of the war should be made in the light of this fact.

Observers pointed out that a number of factors have been increasingly impressed by America's growing power, the half-haired secretary suggested it was only natural that calculations as to the duration of the war should be made in the light of this fact.

GAS RATIONING: Looms for All U. S.

Restriction of gasoline consumption by the 200,000 gas car owners outside the East and the Pacific Northwest to a point where pleasure driving would be almost completely banned before the end of the summer, was predicted as a result of conferences between Defense Transportation Director Joseph B. Eastwood and Chief Administrator Leon Henderson.

New emphasis to the seriousness of the nation's rubber shortage was sent by M. Eastwood when he stated that the United States may not have a sufficient supply of synthetic rubber "in short of three years and perhaps not then."

Disclosure of impending steps toward universal gas limitation followed an indication by President Roosevelt that rationing might be extended to other parts of the country outside the East and the Pacific Northwest, where it is already operative.

Coast Shipping Losses May Bring Investigation

Alring of Blanket Charges May Result From Nazi Torpedoing of American Vessels In Coastwise Trade.

By BAUKHAGE News Analyst and Commentator.

WNI Service, 1343 H Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. "You commentators," said earnest young Leo to me recently "talk about sinking ships and shooting down planes as if you were talking about somebody moving in-aiming chessmen on a board."

I hadn't thought of it that way. We do. We have to. And the people take it that way. They are a long way off from actual combat. You just can't translate a war into personal experience—until it hits you.

That is why it has taken the reverberations of the Nazi torpedoes that are sending down our coastwise eyesight of our coast so long to reach Washington. But that has reached at last and there promises to be a resounding echo in the Maritime Commission and in the shipyards of America.

The need for ships is the greatest need the allied nations face today and the boats are going down faster than they are being built. They are not being built as fast as they might be. Those we have are not being used to their advantage. Those that are being built are not being built as fast as they might be.

Whether or not these charges will appear before this reaches print. The story seems to be exactly the same story that lay behind the delay in the manufacture of tanks and planes and guns which resulted in overhauling of the O.P.M. The charges which were made in that shipyard recall, were—that industry did not want to change over from the manufacture of civilian goods to war production; that government failed to crack down on industry and labor and, in the case of the manufacture of tanks and planes in its service who put the business they represented ahead of the nation's needs.

Whether or not these charges can be made to stick and their causes removed in the case of the Maritime Commission and shipbuilding (management and labor) remains to be seen, but the chances are they will.

These are the things you hear: Most tankers were shipped to the United States in the first three months after Pearl Harbor than there were last year. Before Pearl Harbor, 60,000 of these boats have been put to better use.

Why wasn't the pipeline, suggested a year ago, built so that necessary oil could be sent through it instead of aboard tankers that are being sunk at the rate of three a day? Couldn't the railroads have been forced to cut down their passenger traffic earlier to haul some of that oil?

What was done about the men "loading in the shipyards" after Admiral Land, head of the Maritime Commission, made the public charge? Ditto concerning foremen who were said to have been instructed to tell the men to slow down?

But nothing will be done until the smoke of those burning ships gets into the public's eyes. It has already gotten into some eyes and I hope that many more will get into yours exactly as it was told to me. Here it is in the worker's exact words: "I don't know which way a military necessity."

Eyesight story: "I have just been watering my garden in the cool of the evening and, looking up from the petunias and carnations I was able to see the thin grey smoke billowing up from a ship that was torpedoed few hours ago. A good many men were killed with this particular ship. They were brought into the coast guard station; some of them sent to the hotel and the rest, to the local hospital which was again filled with shipwrecked survivors."

"I have a special interest in that ship because I watched her lying off shore all through the moonlight night. She was three miles off shore and she got under way just at sunup, steaming south in the presumed safety of daylight. We were out watching her at 7 a. m. She was blown up."

"I have seen a comparatively quiet 24 hours in this vicinity only two ships being torpedoed within sight of shore. The other one went down at midnight and there were so many fares from lifeboats that it looked like Greek fire on the Fourth of July. Small boats . . . (sought their shore . . .)

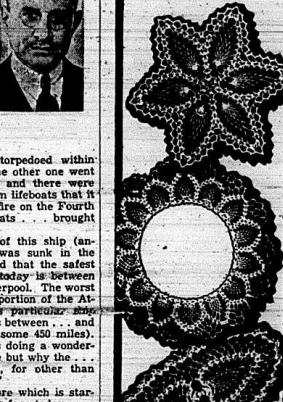

"The survivors of this ship (another one which was sunk in the same vicinity) said that the safest run in the world today is between New York and Liverpool. The worst stretch is . . . (a portion of the Atlantic coast). This particular ship was sunk between New York and Liverpool. (a stretch of some 450 miles). The coast guard is doing a wonderful job around here but they are (the rest detected for other than military reasons)."

"That is the picture which is starting in Washington's eye" face today.

HOW TO MAKE YOUR Electric Iron LAST LONGER

An electric iron is a necessity in the modern home—but irons are no longer being manufactured and you may not be able to get a new one later on, so it's a good idea to take good care of the iron you have. Here are some maintenance hints that you will find helpful.

Keep bottom of iron clean. Wait until iron is cool then wipe off with damp cloth. If necessary, use soapuds or very mild scouring powder. Wipe off with clean damp cloth afterwards.

Never immerse your iron in water. Doing so may result in damage to heating elements next time you connect it.

Avoid scratching sole plate. Do not iron over buttons, zippers or other hard articles. Iron around them.

Be careful not to drop your iron. Dropping puts more irons out of commission than any other one thing.

Don't let iron cord touch the hot iron or rub continuously on edge of board. Either may wear off insulation. Replace the cord at the first sign of wear.

Rub the sole plate of your iron once a month or so with a good grade of paraffin or beeswax. Wipe off on paper or cloth.

If iron has become soiled or starch has stuck to it, sprinkle some salt on a newspaper and run the iron over it.

Don't disconnect iron by yanking on cord. Release by pulling plug at convenience outlet.

Always be sure the iron is perfectly cool before putting it away.

Remember this: It's the contact of heat with the dampened garment that removes wrinkles, not pressure or weight. So save your strength and let the heat do the job.

Navy School at G.E.

Just one evidence of the cooperation between the armed services and our vast industrial army—a school for submarine electricians conducted at one General Electric factory.

1. Electricity is vital to the running of every submarine. It does an amazing array of important jobs, from turning the propeller to cooking the coffee.

2. For that reason, there must be well-trained electricians on every underwater craft. At this school, Navy electricians attend classes taught by G-E engineers.

3. and go out into the shops where they watch workmen construct the same kind of electric equipment that will come 'day be put in their charge.

4. This is but one proof of the thorough training which U.S. Navy gives its men, so that the vital equipment of war will always be ready for action.

THE STORY SO FAR: Con Cameron, who has summed his way from the call, goes the 20 Bar outfit headed for Wild Horse with a herd of cattle. It's his first experience as a cowboy, but Con does well, and when they get to the 20 Bar, the old man, the boss, the permanent, buys him clothes and gives him a horse and saddle. With Caramba Year, another 20 Bar rider, they go to the Drovers' Saloon. There they see Asa Brock, who has bought their cattle; quiet with a new cattle man named Nevil Lowe. Brock is a sharp trader and has all the Wild Horse, including Dynamite Downes, the Con misses Caramba and Con and Caramba join a fare game and win a horse. Then Con misses Caramba and wants to look for him, even though it's an unwise look of Wild Horse that he never quite will be found.

New continue with the story.

CHAPTER II

Con moved away from the fare game as Nobby growled at the intractable dealer to "rattle the box." Keith Yoker grinned at him as he looked around the saloon at the cattle king. But inwardly he was furious.

"I've got to keep remembering that this gang of lost from both ends with fist-fighting. Any more than they've a square deal in the games," he reminded himself as he looked around the saloon for Caramba.

He saw nothing of the cheerful cowboy, but at one end of the gamblers' half of the huge room a most stumbled over a litter of equipment still partly crated. He went out into the twilight and moved up and down the long, snaky lonesome ways were everywhere, now.

He came finally to the big two-story hotel and stopped to look across the tracks at its veranda. The tiny frame railway station was just beyond. As he stood wondering if Caramba had had time to leave, he saw a train carrying Mrs. Kleiss, a short combination train came through the town and drew up at the station. Con got out to watch men get off, others get on.

The tall, dark young man, Nevil Lowe, hurried past Con, with a girl half running beside him. She carried two large valises. Con looked with interest at the girl. She was dressed in dark, attractive, smart and graceful. At the step of the passenger car Lowe put down the luggage and she caught him about the neck, kissed him on the cheek and said, "It's going to be just a grand trip," she said. "But I'll miss you terribly."

"You—will!" Lowe drawled. He swung her up, pushed the valises after her and waved. The engineer slammed his whistle and as he swung away from the station he moved. Lowe's wife, probably, he decided, as pretty a girl as he had ever seen.

He went toward the hotel and in the door of Mrs. Kleiss' dining room looked for Caramba.

"Well!" Caramba said from behind him. "If you're coming you're figured you'd be along pretty soon."

"What happened to you?" Con demanded curiously.

"Well, I—didn't I tell you I was going to a while?—I just thought of something—"

"Ah!" Con said softly, beginning to grin.

Before Caramba could answer, Mrs. Lowe and a bustling little woman came into the stair hall from the veranda.

"She'll have a fine time," the woman said brightly. "Doesn't she, too? Couple months of trailing—never think she could—see her prettier out. Didn't find your maid? Carousin' likely! I've got the best crooks skin you, I told William—leave your money with me—no temptation. Then—if you want to do the same, I'll do it in no time!"

"Why, thanks, but I'm not staying long in Wild Horse. I did sort of want to stay for—well—the ceremonies. But—"

"Nice to have you. That will be Wednesday night, though."

"Oh!" Con cried, looking at Caramba. "That William, you better rush you off tonight—tomorrow at latest—Well, I know you're both going to be absolutely happy and I congratulate you, William."

In the dining room, not so crowded at this second table, Con sat carefully across from Caramba and shook with quiet amusement. Caramba scowled at him.

"Well, I really was thinking about doing it, all the time," he said lightly. "Maybe not right off, but anyhow, she's a fine woman. We're going to build onto the corral and the livery business. I'll handle that end, beats punching cows."

"Of course it does!" Con assured

him. "And she is a nice woman. Did you see the girl with that fellow Nevil Lowe? His wife, I reckon it was. Pretty as a red wagon."

"Meroba had her in charge. I didn't see her. She comes out with the herd and now she's gone off visiting. What you aiming to do, tonight?"

"Dance?" Con informed him, grinning. "I peeped into one dance hall awhile ago and there was a pretty blonde girl there who smiled at me and I wish she'd just cut out to teach a pore cowboy how to choose his new boots around."

He shrugged and Caramba nodded agreement.

Con drifted toward the dance halls, when he and Caramba had decided against it and went on to the Drovers'. Baldy was nowhere in sight and for a little while Con watched the several games played. He saw Dynamite Downes and Brock drinking. The buyer went out and a towheaded youngster in all the glory of a cowboy dude pulled the horse over to a table of the cowboys near Con indicated the white-haired, kid-boots boy.

"El Muchacho—and that's a murder on the road to happen to the man. Comes from down below the River. He's a deputy marshal and his killings is legalized before they come here. He shot one man here just for brushing against him."

Con nodded. He was watching Nevil Lowe watch the game.

Downes and Murchio continued to face the bar mirror and drink. But Asa Brock appeared from somewhere as if he had been watching for Nevil Lowe. His red face was twisted in a grin and he took Lowe by the arm and this time they went together to the bar.

"That cowboy who had identified the deputy marshal for Con shook his head.

"Slack! Asa's got him another shorthorn," he said harshly. "By morning there'll be another hide a flapping on the Brock fence. That fellow's got some of the best looking horses in the state. He's got a covering eye on, too, well—"

He moved on to the fare bank and Con looked at the pile of ten pin capital equipment. The cowboy who had the bag again, Brock was talking earnestly to Lowe, waving his hands. Lowe, stalling, shook his head. Brock turned to Con and as they left the bar and came toward the row of thick pillars which divide the saloon, Brock was saying up whatever persuasions he was trying and waddled off, when Lowe shook his head.

Lowe across staring around. Con studied him, from where he stood beside a heap of bowling balls. Then from the bar came the deputy marshal, Muchacho. He came up to Lowe and from under the wide brim of his white Stetson narrowed blue eyes surveyed the taller man up and down. When Muchacho lifted his left hand from the belt and reached toward Lowe's coat, Con held his breath.

Lowe swayed back slightly, avoiding the hand. Muchacho's grin widened. His right hand twisted slightly and closed on the butt of a Colt.

Con looked vaguely about him. Then he stopped quickly, picked up one of the bowling balls and sent it expertly across twenty feet of floor to crash into Muchacho's ankles and send him spinning, sprawling.

Lowe's hand jerked up under his coat and came out with a pistol. From the bar Dynamite Downes plunged out. He had a pistol in each hand.

"On you!" Con snarled, picking up a second ball.

Downes gaped at the ball hurtling toward him, hesitated, stiffened as for a jump, but was on slow. The ball struck a warped place in the ground, jumped and cannoned into his thigh. He sat down, dropping one pistol, and drew the other jerkily.

Men were yelling and the Drovers' was darkening, shot by shot. Con put a hand on the window sill, vaulted out and ran down the side

Horses were tied at a rack behind the Drovers' and he unhitched one quickly. He swung into the strange saddle and turned the horse.

Inside the Drovers' was pandemonium. The shooting. He rode up to Mrs. Kleiss' corral, twisted reins around saddle horn and slapped the horse into a trot.

"The drawing holster caught at him when he came to the corral gate. Con and Caramba had talked briefly to him, but now Con only said that he was riding out to see a man. He saddled quickly, took belt and whistled pistol from an alforja and looked to the hang of his gun with more interest than he had ever felt in his forty days of wearing it.

"If I'm not back by the time Caramba Year gets in," he said calmly to the hostler. "I'll let him think that he was right about Baldy and me being different. Give him this five—hell ask me. I've got to have a drink on me before you sleep."

After a while he turned vaguely westward and then through the night he rode and rested, rode and rested. With daylight he was in open country and Wild Horse, or any other town, might have been thousands of miles away.

The hills were still far away when the sun dropped over them. Cotton-tails jumped up before Pancho and it was easy to kill a half dozen with the pistol. He camped on a patch of dry creek and broiled his supper. Before daylight he had gotten rabbit again and packed one, cooked, in an alforja.

By noon he was against the hills and he had enjoyed every hour of his riding.

He came upon a Triangle Tall rider in late afternoon and turned off with the chestnut youngster to a line camp. Two more cowboys, one from the adjoining Hogen outfit, were already at the camp. Con passed the camp as he appeared in Wild Horse and ate venison steaks and beans and sordough biscuits.

"It ain't the rabbit—or the venison—or the turkey—or the beef—or your mind," the Hogen cowboy said understandingly. "It's not having salt. How about some stud horse poker?"

None of them had much money. The Hogen man and Con won the few dollars. "Easy" and "Two Eyes," the Triangle Tall punchers. Then Con's three fours beat the Hogen player's kings and queens and sent him home.

"Two Eyes," the cross-eyed man, staked a 4 Winchester carbine with scabbard and case against thirty dollars, on a single roll of the dice. He shuffled the deck and at Con's insistence took first cut. His six of diamonds beat the king of hearts.

"Why'n't you ride over to headquarters and hit up the Ramrod for a job?" Easy asked him. "This is a good outfit, big and large. And ambitious! Man, if your cards always run the way we've seen 'em, you ought to own the outfit inside a year."

"Oh, I've got too much iron in my blood," Con evaded him. "Besides, you're too close to town."

"Yeah," the Hogen rider drawled, studying the end of his cigarette, "this is close to Wild Horse. And a man don't want to be in the way around with a bowling ball in his hand, when he's in town."

"Oh!" Con said softly. "So the tale has gone to the wind."

"I run into one of the 92 busters this morning," the Hogen man explained with sudden grin. "He was in the Drovers' when that little son of a bitch, aimed to kill the stranger. I kind of wondered about you from the time you don't worry. Chalkers; you can show off your whiskers and shove your own face. You're fine kidfinks!"

They talked of Wild Horse and its controlling ring. All agreed that the man who was in the black books of this leadership was safe—only behind a small army or when out of town.

"They know your name, looks like," the friendly Hogen cowboy said. "So it looks like rolling up miles, for you!"

When he saddled Pancho and hung the little carbine cannon under his leg and drew the other in his hand, he turned to the right and gave his directions about his gun. "Particular, they warned him against the town of Fronteras, and every resident or visitor of it."

YOU BET CAMELS ARE THE FAVORITE. THERE'S NOTHING LIKE A CAMEL FOR FLAVOR.

CAMELS SUIT ME BETTER ALL WAYS. THEY DON'T TIRE MY TASTE AND THEY'RE Milder BY FAR.

With men in the Navy, Army, Marines, and Coast Guard, the favorite cigarette is Camel. (Based on actual sales records in Canteens and Post Exchanges).
