New Device Gives Motor Efficiency, Saves Fuel

Science will play a big part in our nation's defense and war plans. The scientific research foundation of California has been conducting experiments with a new discovery of the greatest space ever attained mechanically - developing the astounding speed of over 15,000 r.p.m. The foundation has been using this terrific speed to break down and atomize pathogenic microorganisms that can only be seen with ordinary power microscopes. The findings of the research foundation have been very interesting to members of the medical profession. Its clinical results have been very satisfactory. It has long been known that the human body harbors numerous forms of pathogenic bacteria (disease-bearing bacteria) such as ash diphtheria, tuberculosis, influenza and we believe infantile paralysis. It was necessary in order to disinfectate chemicals, solutions and enzymes, that some method must be devised that would be applied to break down a fine atomized state that it could be readily absorbed into the body through the lung tissue. During these research experiments, it was discovered that the basic principle used to disintegrate the pathogenic bacteria could be applied to the atomizing of petroleum hydro-carbon series of petroleum (fuels) used in the internal combustion engine. The experimental results of the research foundation were astounding.

Coldest Spot on Earth

In the interior of Siberia Without exception, the coldest place on earth is Werchojansk, in the interior of Siberia. The lowest temperature ever recorded was taken there on January 15, 1933 - it was on there on January 15, 1933 - it was 90 degrees and a fraction below zero.

Werchojansk is in the latitude of the pole and is so cold that the earth is generally frozen to a depth of about 900 feet. In the warmest season, the experimenters found that to illustrate just how cold it is in this part of Siberia in the winter, the inhabitants of the town could not break through the ice with a pick as the implement rebounds with an incredible, not to say dangerous, impact. The snow blowing in the air and it is a crystal sheet of ice before it strikes the ground. Occasionally wild geese and other game birds pick up dead in the fields of Werchojansk. In their flight across the country they frequently freeze to death high in the air and fall like a bomb to earth. In the winter time the people buy their milk frozen or by the "piece," being allowed to freeze about a stick which makes a convenient handle with which to carry it like a "spoon handle." The milkman leaves at the homes of his customers who have their own troubles trying to melt it.

Nazis Face Serious Retreats in Russia Following New Major Gains by Soviet; U. S. Planes Smash Jap Ships at Rabaul; Gen. Clark Commands Africa Fifth Army

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union staff writers and not necessarily those of this newspaper.) Released by Western Newspaper Union

President Roosevelt examines a globe of the world, which was presented to him by the army. The globe, which is 50 inches in diameter, shows in considerable detail strategic areas of the earth's surface. It occupies a prominent place in the President's office in the White House.

SIGNIFICANCE: Of Russia's Drive

While the world marveled at the military might of the Russians which was able to push the Nazis back all the while the battle for the full significance of this winter campaign was overlooked by many. Should the offensive maintain its momentum of the early days of this new year Hitler's troops faced the definite prospect of retreating to lines they held in the last World War.

On both ends of the long fighting front the Russians were scoring major triumphs. In the north, the vital German-held supply base and rail center of Velikie Luki had fallen to the Soviet army. (Velikie Luki is only 200 miles from East Prussia.) In this sector the big threat was to the Nazis massed before Leningrad because if the Russians pushed beyond Velikie Luki toward that stronghold all the Germans in the area would be cut off from supplies. Further extending the picture, military experts foresee the necessary evacuation of Estonia and northern Latvia.

But while much of this campaign in the north was speculation, Russian might had already dealt a series of crushing blows to the Germans massed in front of Stalingrad and in the Caucasus. Success here came as the result of a bold strategic move on the part of Josef Stalin and General Zhukov. For when these Russian leaders decided that Germany had about spent her might in the all-out effort to capture Stalingrad they unleashed a counter-offensive directly before the city. Soon they learned that the Germans had few reserves between the Volga and the Don rivers.

Thus the Russians took heart and pushed westward toward the all-important city of Rostov. Capture of Rostov would mean the entrapment of a million Nazis in the Caucasus. Hitler realized this and started a general movement of his troops in that sector. But again the Russians attacked and were successful in capturing many important points while driving the Nazis ever backward from their last year's goal of oil fields at Grozny and Baku.

NEW SPIRIT: On Capitol Hill

Over were the colorful opening sessions of the two Houses and the national legislators had settled down to the tough job ahead. Yet a new spirit—some observers called it a "spirit of independence"—hung over Capitol Hill. On the biggest objective of all—the winning of the war—there was a "betwixt" between Democrats and Republicans. There, however, united ended. Support of the administration in most of its home policies would no doubt be forthcoming from the Democratic side of both houses but there would be no quick "write your own ticket" edicts of power to the executive branch. Legislation on behalf of brethren, the Democrats were in a "show-me" mood as far as domestic programs were concerned.

So small was the party of the Democratic party that anything could and more than likely would happen. Republicans had their eyes on 1944 and were pledged to strictly uphold the position of an opposition party on matters affecting the home front.

FOOD PRICES: And Subsidies

Householders with low incomes frozen for the duration, looked to Washington for further developments on a reported program to allow food prices to rise rather than to have the government continue subsidies to farmers. This report indicated that such a policy is gradually being put into effect, and that subsidies will be continued only where necessary to keep up farm production. If so, this program represents a change from that carried out under the Henderson who even "went around" congress to reach his subsidy goal.

At one time he asked congress for half billion dollars to carry out subsidy plan and keep food prices down. This was rejected and the government began to use funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to maintain temporary subsidies.

The new policy would have two main objectives:

1. To keep down the national debt by not allowing further subsidy payments from the federal treasury.

2. Would make consumers stand their share in a price rise. It is argued that there is a great surplus buying power evident among consumers.

But the household whose income is not from war work and has not been increased because of the war boom was caught squarely in the middle. He found no comfort in the fact that food prices had risen 16 per cent in the year ending last October and that in November they had risen another 1.9 per cent. Later figures were not available for him to fret about.

CHINESE MISSION: 'Not Recalled'

Chang Tao-fan, Chinese minister of information, has emphatically denied that Lieut. Gen. Hsiung Shih-fu has merely in a formal mission to Washington. He said that Hsiung's visit to London—and even a trip to Chungking—was merely in a formal course of events. Hsiung will turn to the United States, the minister of information said.

VICTORY FLEET: Production Doubled

More than 16,000,000 tons of merchant shipping—double last year's output—will be produced in 1943, President Roosevelt said today in a press conference during which U. S. shipyards were praised by the President for their record-breaking performances. The 1942 goal of 8,000,000 tons was surpassed by 90,000 tons. At the end of December merchant ships were being built at a rate of 14,400,000 tons a year, the President said. This rate will continue to increase until the peak is reached during May, at which time shipyards will be producing 18,000,000 tons a year with a rate of four at present. Totals do not include a number of ships built for the army forces. When peak production of 1942 was reached in December, 121 ships, totaling 1,999,000 tons, were built. In the year 1941 only 65 ships, totaling 1,088,000 tons, were produced.

U. S. WAR DEAD: Listed by OWI

Since Pearl Harbor, 8,331 members of the armed forces of the United States have been killed, the Office of War Information has disclosed. Total casualties include 1,941 missing, including killed, wounded, missing, interned in neutral countries and prisoners of war. The army lists 6,390 missing, coast guard and the Philippine Scouts.

AFRICA FIFTH ARMY: Gen. Clark in Command

Another step in the organization of huge Allied forces for the assault on Tunis and Bizerte in North Africa was made with the announcement that the United States fifth army has been activated and Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark placed in command of the new force.

General Clark, 46, is the hero who, traveling by submarine to North Africa three weeks before the Allied landings, held a secret rendezvous with the Mediterranean and the other theaters of war. The announcement indicated that a large United States army of several divisions has been organized through its rapid march to fight alongside Gen. K. N. Anderson's first army in Tunisia. The size of the army was not indicated. It may mean a force of as few as two or three divisions, although it may reach 10 to 12 divisions.

Meanwhile the United States army force struck strong blows in support of French and American ground forces in central Tunisia. Railroad yards were bombed at Kairouan and other targets were marked as few as 100 miles northeast of Fondouk.

Bad weather continued to keep the opposing armies comparatively inactive in the north. Observers said that French troops, with a complete disregard for politics and ancient equipment, are fighting with great gallantry in central and southern Tunisia.

BUTTER: Effective February 15

Effective February 15, new order by Food Administrator Charles M. Anderson sets aside 30 per cent of the nation's creamery butter production for the military forces and the Lend-Lease program of 1943. This means that a civilian supply averaging 13 pounds of butter per person for the year will be at least 30 per cent less per person than was available last year. If production goals are not met or if military demands increase, civilian butter supply may be cut still more.

Washington Digest Social Security Program, Labor Laws Face Congress

Proposed Legislation Would Bring Unions Under Definite Restrictions; New Insurance Plan to 'Out-Beveridge' England's Program.

By BAUKHAUGE News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1343 H Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

As the ship of state pulls out of the holiday doldrums, skipper and crew are getting their jaws for rough weather. There are cross currents ahead in the new congress which are going to set the old ship rocking.

Symbolic of conflicting movements, the debate of which will soon be filling the Congressional Record, are these two: A proposed bill to bring labor unions into the restricting field of legislation such as business regulations and anti-trust laws, and a social security program which some say will out-Beveridge England's new Beveridge bill that program, introduced by William Beveridge says, is "in some ways a revolution."

The "holiday doldrums" I mentioned were not entirely a seasonal affair this year. There was a lull at all-timed when congress went home and the nation turned to festival gaiety. It was merely a pre-meditated lull which was necessitated by the turnover in the last election. The administration knew that what would happen during the interim between November and January, it would, in some measure, be undone when anti-administration forces returned to the White House.

Stop-Gap Arranged

Since manpower is the prime consideration of the moment, a stop-gap arrangement with much more Menpower Commissioner McNutt was given new powers and a far-reaching program was authorized. It was mostly ballyhoo and just before Christmas wide publicity was given to a document which was obviously arranged with much more stricter regimentation of labor was in the wind. The long-postponed, but inevitable, national service act was introduced in the House.

The document was a draft of a bill made by Grenville Clark, an attorney who suddenly emerged as a presidential favorite. He was announced that he made a special trip to England to study the British manpower setup. He remained silent until before Christmas and congress had gone home, but every congressman received a copy of the proposed legislation.

About two weeks earlier, shortly after the Beveridge report was made public, a cabinet officer was asked to buy what he produced. He busy and draw up a program that fits America's needs a little better than the Beveridge plan would. When the President was asked at a press and radio conference if he was going to do anything about congress on the subject—that was about the time of the remark of the cabinet member—he said "no."

The Beveridge bill was the natural result of the Battle of Britain. Then a common danger brought the British people closer together. The Americans had not taken care of Class lines don't exist in the shambles. A bomb-put ducesh can't be put in a bag. The poor suddenly realized that if they could be taken care of as well as the rich, they might be thought to have a little better distribution of the ordinary decencies of life in prosperous peacetime. Wise leaders didn't wait until the war was over to face angry demands which might turn into real revolution. Sir William Beveridge's committee drew up the blueprint for what they called "a British revolution" in the country's economic setup under which, in a 1,700 official words, the people would contribute by their own preference, to a national insurance fund rather than take a hand-out from the state.

"Assurance" The goal of the Beveridge plan is to lay the ghost of insecurity by means of "assurance." Assurance is a word which means to insure, to call "insurance" and which really defines the commodity better than our word—assurance—that men and women will be safe and secure through sickness and unemployment and old age; would have money to take the baby through its difficult early stages; would have a decent burial without burdening friends or relatives.

BRIEFS by Baukhage

The use of aerial bombs as air-raid warning devices are frowned upon by the war department in a statement to OGD officials. Not only are they considered to be confused with that of anti-aircraft fire, but they have doubtful value for warning purposes. Communist propaganda is being used to discourage the practice.

relative; would provide a working woman with a bonus when she married so she wouldn't be penalized for enjoying conjugal bliss. All this would be done on the principle of ordinary commercial insurance except that the government would run the machinery. Both labor and capital would contribute as such and the people as a whole, in accordance with their income, would pay a share through taxes.

The plan is not new. But it is a considerable extension of the present security laws, such as Britain has had for a long time and such as the New Deal brought to America.

No sane American politician, no matter how liberal, stands in a conservative side, would suggest repealing America's social security laws. It couldn't be done. But the controversy will arise in congress when attempts are made, as they will be, to extend the benefits, both as to amounts paid and to new categories of workers. Such extensions are contemplated in the plan now cooking in Washington.

Labor Regulation

That is one trend we can look for. Turning counter to it on the surface, but insisting on a shooting at "greatest good for the greatest number" is the trend toward regulation of organized labor. Probably a dozen bills have been drawn up, all of which tend to put the screws on labor unions. Many liberals feel that the uncertainty here is coming. The growing number of strikes in wartime, when maximum production is a matter of patriotism as well as necessity, the existing union rules which tend to interfere with maximum production, the various "restraints" considered as evil as the restraint of the free market from monopolies, all have been highlighted by war conditions. Bills will be presented in the next session which tend to the restriction of unions could be avoided if the unions cleaned their own house.

America, as in England, when a nation is called upon to make the sacrifices demanded by this war, it can be expected that the people will insist on the greatest distribution of opportunity and reward of effort when peace comes. The war will increase the number of people whose development can furnish the jobs for the consumers and provide the pay which makes it possible for them to buy what is produced. Any group or institution—firm, labor, management—which stands in the way of this maximum production is bound to buy what it wings clipped. Meanwhile, the people will demand and get greater "assurance" against rainy days, which come even when prosperity is with us. And in providing it, if Britain comes along, America cannot be far behind.

Sightless Workers

Lockheed officials report that 13 blind workers who are helping build fighting and bombing planes in the Lockheed factory are doing a job which respects better than average and turn out more work than their fellows. The workers are being trained, including two women, these sightless workers passed a month's placement test in the Lockheed factory and are now working as tubing assemblers, burning-rod operators and assemblers of switch boxes. One is a parts handler on a conveyor in the pipe shop.

Guide dogs bring the blind employees to the plant each morning and back to the city before retiring. The blind worker to be placed, if. However, the number of jobs they can perform with safety will always be limited, the guide dogs said. Lockheed hopes to add jobs for more sightless workers.

Stretch That Meat!

Today most of you homemakers find the meat situation actually testing your mettle. In your trips to the butcher's you may find many cuts of meat you haven't used often in the past, and less-and less meat available for your menus, and thus I'm going to give you some first aid in preparing them.

Fortunately, the cheaper cuts of meat, along with liver and kidneys and the other entrails not included in the meat rationing program are as rich in proteins and minerals as their better known relatives. Cooked correctly, they can become as popular.

"Extend the meat" should become the motto of every family for the duration. The way to do it is to include unrationed cuts plentifully through the menus, use cereals and meat extenders such as oatmeal and bread crumbs on rice, and substitute fowl and cheese in the menu for steaks and chops as often as possible.

Veal kidneys combine with beef in this especially delightful and nutritious stew—and stretch that beef to serve eight people. It's a colorful main dish with bright carrots and button mushrooms:

- Beef and Kidney Stew. (Serves 6 to 8)
- 3 veal kidneys
- 1 pound beef, cut in strips
- 1 cup sliced carrots
- 1 cup sliced onion
- 1 cup cubed potatoes
- 1 cup sliced or button mushrooms
- 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Remove skin and fat from kidneys; soak in cold, salted water for 1 hour; cover with cold water, bring slowly to boiling point. Drain; cut into small pieces. Roll beef strips in flour; brown in hot fat. Add 4 cups stock from kidneys and cook 30 minutes. Add kidneys, vegetables, sauce and salt. Cook 30 minutes. Add parsley. Thicken if desired.

Have you done much with liver? Then you know it is a dish of distinction, worthy of being served even on special occasions:

Lynn Says:

The Score Card: Citrus fruits, apples, Hubbard squash or acorn bush offer bargains during the cold crisp months. Include them in your menus.

What to do about those recipes calling for whipped cream? You can use a little of the cream off the top of the bottle, if you chill it well for a day or so; and chill the bowl which you use for whipping... and the beaters too. Some of the brands of canned milk will also whip, if they're well chilled, along with the bowl and beaters.

If you're unable to obtain chocolate or cocoa sometimes at the grocery's, use victory type of cookies utilizing honey, corn syrup, and the wheat flour for darker cakes.

Inexpensive delicacies to help you on the slender meat-rationed days: boiled, baked tongue with raisin or cranberry sauce; pigs' feet; oxtail soup; hocks; brains; tripe with broiled mushrooms.

KIDNEY STONES

A patient consulted a physician for a pain in the region of the appendix. As the appendix had been removed, the physician told the patient that the pain was likely due to adhesions following the appendix operation. However, to the surprise of the physician X-rays showed a large stone in the kidney and that kidney stone was removed.

It was because the pain was in the appendix region and the back on pain following the course of the tube carrying urine from kidney to bladder, that caused the physician to mistake kidney stones for adhesions. Thanks to the X-rays the removal of the kidney stone brought complete relief from pain.

The above, however, is an exceptional case as most cases of kidney stone that cause symptoms can be recognized.

Dr. Charles Pierre-Mathe, San Francisco, director of the department of urology, St. Mary's hospital in "Clinical Medicine" says: "A sudden, severe pain in the small of the back or abdomen which radiates to the groin should be looked on with suspicion by the attending physician. All patients suffering from kidney stones have red blood cells in the urine which can be detected by making a microscopic examination. I have never seen a patient suffering with kidney stone whose urine did not show red blood cells under the microscope. In many patients, crystals, usually of the variety found in the stone present, are encountered."

While the family physician with the aid of X-rays, microscopic examination of urine, use of dyes, can locate the position and composition of the stone or stones, Dr. Mathe advises, and most physicians will agree, that a genito-urinary specialist—urologist—should be called into consultation in these cases. The urologist will carry out a complete examination including cystoscopy—instrument with lamps and microscope of a catheter up into ureters (the two tubes carrying urine from kidneys to bladder), study the amount of urine coming from each kidney, and a complete study of the urine collected from kidneys and bladder.

After removal of stone or stones, they are examined to find composition and nature of organisms present so that the proper antibiotics can be used to try to prevent the formation of more stones.

Diabetic Coma And Insulin Shock

Some months ago a moving picture showed the insulin shock in which a patient was injected diabetic coma. The floor nurse had rushed for the intern on duty, and on arrival the doctor administered injected insulin and ordered salt solution. The physician in charge of the case who told about the patient's symptoms was furious, as he told the young intern that the patient was suffering from insulin shocks, too much insulin, and the patient's life was endangered.

The young intern suggested that they both take a look at the patient and he was found to be in a normal condition.

The point of the story of the picture need not concern us. However, there are no so many diabetics, all of whom know how to treat themselves when at home or work, who may be placed in strange surroundings when they are suffering with diabetic coma (acidosis) or with insulin shocks. The treatment is very simple in either case, but, as the two conditions are exactly opposite in character, the treatment for each case is different.

What is diabetic coma and what is insulin shock? How can one tell the difference if a known diabetic is found unconscious?

Diabetic coma is a condition brought on by overeating—that is, the patient himself may eat too much food—the body, due to an overactive thyroid gland or infection which eats or burns up the food too rapidly. Treatment is therefore by insulin injection.

Insulin shock or reaction is due to too much insulin, to taking too little food after insulin has been taken, or taking too much exercise and using up the food eaten too soon. The treatment is to give some starch or sugar at once.

HEALTH BRIEFS

To prevent psittacosis, parrot fever, government authorities in 1932 adopted U. S. Interstate Quarantine Regulations. These regulations recommended that every international shipment of parrots, love birds, and parakeets be accompanied by a certificate from the proper health authorities. It was stated that: "The bird or birds in the shipment have come from distributing establishments, free from infection."

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

In Colours usually natives with our favorably print their feet and hands in the mud with an old tire that will obliterate motor wheels.

The rubber ladder, or extension, in Brazil lives partly off the forest in the sense that it is made from a tree which grows in the forest. A shagreen and machine are its traditional equipment.

Superior quality of Georgia belated that the best one for the job is the one that is made with an old tire around the world.

When dual tires are misused, the lower tire carries most of the load, wears off its tread abnormally and falls early due to the precession of excess load in its road contact.

It is estimated that the average tire runs 12 per cent of its weight in use and yields about 1/2 of its original weight at the end of its life.

Tidbits Of Kentucky Folklore

By Gordon Wilson, Ph. D.

I have just returned from a funeral that took me a long way into memory. For the man who had died had come into my life when I was quite young and practically untouched by the aging process that life applies to us all. He was a quite, good man, never-mentioned in the papers. He held a high position in society without once repining for days that would never be. And the beautiful simplicity of the service, the very presence of the strong men who had known him, made me think back over the passing of many whom I have known and lost. I could not help reviewing some of the funerals I had attended, in old Fidelity neighborhood some time ago.

The most impressive funeral I ever witnessed came in one of the last years I lived on the farm, a funeral that, though I did not know it, a folk flavor that I cherish today. Over the creek from us lived Bill Warren, and he had a very large family who sometimes greatly tried his patience and always tried his pocketbook. Rarely was he free from debt to my father, the county doctor, and to many another person. He tried to farm and barely held body and soul together, because he was a very poor manager. He had several children. One, Warren, was not trusted the mistress of America. Bill had been a minor officer in the Confederate army and had been wounded in the war. A portrait of him made when he wore his uniform as a lad showed us of the younger generation what a handsome man he had been. He tried several times to get ahead in the world, only to fall back into dire poverty. But always, always, he could be found who were ready to lend him provisions with him. Finally he decided to run for one of the county offices, and was elected by an overwhelming majority, not because he was a great politician, but because he was a good man, trusted and loved by everybody, poor and well-to-do. And then, just after this triumph, he was taken with some serious internal congestion and died, under an operation, shortly to the last moment, for internal operations were scarce then. The next day there came to our little graveyard not only the neighbors and friends and relatives, but the good and great and near famous from all parts of the county and adjoining counties. This man had been a local preacher of some merit, but the funeral was not merely a church occasion. Most of the service was held in the graveyard, for no two buildings in the community could hold the crowd. Several people, including preachers, neighbors, and old army comrades, said the simple but touching words about our neighbor. The flower gardens of the many parts of the area contributed their offerings.

YOUR FEDERAL INCOME TAX

NOTE—This is the first of a series of articles about your income tax that will be printed in The Mt. Vernon Signal from week to week. See next week's paper for the second installment.

No. 1

The federal income tax is, as the name implies, a tax levied upon incomes, and it is payable in relation to it is payable in relation to the amount of income. Income, for federal income tax purposes, means in general any compensation for one's services, whether the compensation be in money or in goods or other services. It includes also the net value received for the product of one's own services. In the case of a farmer: income from investments; profit from business operations; and other gains from sales and exchanges of goods and property. Certain limited categories of income are, however, tax exempt, and to the extent of such exemption are included in computing the tax.

Because of exemptions from the tax given to persons having less than certain stated amounts of income, as well as because of various deductions and credits allowable, only a small proportion of the number of persons receiving income have until recently been subject to the tax. Thus, of the estimated 55 million persons in the country who received income in one form or another during the calendar year 1941, only some 28 million persons were required to file federal income tax returns for that year, while of these some 26 million, more than 9 million were not taxable due to credits and deductions allowable. As a result of the lowering of exemptions, many more persons are now subject to the federal income tax than before, and for the calendar year 1942 it is estimated that more than 35 million persons will file federal income tax returns. To the large number of persons now subject to the federal income tax, who have never reported income before for federal tax purposes, an understanding of the law and applicable regulations is of prime importance.

An income tax return is a declaration on the part of the taxpayer of his total taxable income for the year, together with the various deductions, exemptions and credits to which he is entitled by law. The first requirement of the law is the filing of an appropriate return—individuals generally; this must be done by March 15, following the end of the calendar year. The return must be filed with the appropriate collector of Internal Revenue for the district in which is located the legal residence or principal place of business of the person making the return. Under the present law every single person, and every married person not living with husband or wife, must file a return.

Under the present law every single person, and every married person not living with husband or wife, must file a return.

MAKING THE MOST OF YOUR LIGHTING
(No. 8 of a Series)

Avoid Sharp Contrasts of Light and Shadow

Ever notice how it tires your eyes to read under a single bright light when the rest of the room is in semi-darkness? The reason is that brightness causes the pupils of your eyes to contract while darkness causes them to expand. Every time you let your eyes stray from your brightly-lighted book to the surrounding shadow area, your eyes try to adjust themselves to the change. Eventually this causes eyestrain and its accompaniment of fatigue and nervous muscular tension. For maximum eye comfort, you should not only have plenty of well-diffused light on your reading or sewing, but ample soft light elsewhere throughout the room. Good light, evenly distributed, adds to your reading enjoyment and also protects precious eyesight.

GHOST LAKE

By ARTHUR STRINGER

W. H. U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: To help save Norland Always Alan Slade agrees to fly a supposed scientific man, Frayne and his assistant, Karnell, to the lake to search for the trampoline.

With the plane's engine sputtering, Frayne, frugal, buys a new necktie, which is stolen. When Slade returns from the woods to start the engine, he finds the plane, aided by an eskimo named Umanak and by his old prospector friend, Zeke and Minty. Slade goes to the camp, where he learns that the missing plane is being used by Frayne to take something out of the country. When Slade attempts to investigate the plane's career, he is knocked unconscious by Karnell. "Rescued" by Umanak, who is abandoned by him on a deserted isle, Zeke and Minty find Slade's plane. The Flying Padre returns to the mainland. Umanak is found, exhausted, by Dr. Mersbach and his daughter, Lynn, and he tells them he has found the missing plane. He has also brought a sample of the strange wood which turns out to be pitchblende, source of a new kind of power. They decide to take the plane and Frayne and Karnell to Slade. Now continue with the story.

"It's you who mustn't take chances," she reminded him.

CHAPTER XVI

But taking Umanak home had its difficulties. "No like devil-bird," was his stubborn protest.

But the Flying Padre was insistent. And Lynn, after much talk and argument, finally persuaded the old Innuit to climb into the cabin. There he crunched down in such manner with his hands covering his face. He moaned aloud as the plane took off. He continued to sweat and tremor on the trip to Iktavak.

And once there, disdaining Lynn's help, he disembarked with unexpected energy. He was greeted by an admiring group of natives whose exclamations of envy did much to restore the old man's staid, stoic morale.

But Lynn's father was no longer interested in Umanak.

"Our next job," he said, "is to get in touch with Corporal McGarry at Great Bear. This begins to look like a case where the territorial authorities ought to get busy."

Lynn showed no active interest in that suggestion.

"Our first job," she maintained, "is to find Alan Slade."

Some unlooked-for timbre of determination in her voice brought the Flying Padre's glance about to her face.

"But I feel we ought to swing over to Echo Harbor first. Umanak's an Eskimo, and you can, of course, discount his story a little. But if he's found what he says these thoughts to be confirmed."

Lynn studied the country over which the faded blue wings of the Flying Padre's plane drifted like a shadow. It was a vast, open, and new to her, yet in its general aspect she sighed as the Flying Padre banked and turned and landed on a blue-watered lake where the wild fowl scuttled away at their approach. She reached down and touched the pond slowly in toward a pebbled shore fringed by a scattering of driftwood.

"That's all that's left," said the man at the controls. He sat for a moment in silence. His face looked tired and dispirited. But when he glanced at Lynn's equally dispirited face, he roused himself.

"This is exactly what we're looking for," he said. "Firewood waiting for us and a clean shoreline without mosquitoes."

"That haven't I found?" said the still motionless girl.

"We'll find him," was the other's quietly assured response to that. Alan getting out of the plane, he rummaged through his cabin equipment for a joined rod which he kept there. She looked down at the cloudy eyes as he was gnawing him back ready his rod and tackle. "There's fish in these waters," he announced. "And if you get in here ready we'll have a beauty or two for supper."

"But we haven't found Alan," she tried to herself as she mechanically set about her work.

The question of Alan's whereabouts was still her mind as they took off, the next morning, and he'd deeper—into the land of stunted spruce, holes and empty ridges. A pair of limpet-like creatures, she saw her as they flew on. Then she saw how the plane was veering eastward and her father was leaning forward to study the country and that would suddenly in and out between the shadowy hills.

"That must be the Anawot," he called out.

She took her turn at studying the terrain over which they were drifting. The Anawot, she had heard, malignant like a snake. She looked so little that was consoling in its aspects that she was glad when they temporarily landed on a shore from its ever-changing course and headed for a district of bolder ridges interspersed with lakes that lay like pools of silver in the morning sun. Some of them were small and some of them were large. But the heavier tree-growth along the shores told her they had left the Land of the Sticks behind them. So some, too, she also saw, were studied with small interest. On the large lake held the ghost of an islet in its very center, like a tiny pupil at the center of a wider iris of azure.

Lynn's eyes were on that island as they bore down on it. It looked tiny, as they drew nearer, and took on a new irregularity of outline. Then she saw it was not a dot of land. It was a gray-winged plane floating there in its bath of blue.

She could feel her heart come up in her throat.

"The ghost plane," she cried aloud.

But the Flying Padre, apparently, had a different opinion. He looked against the blue of untroubled northern water. He turned and circled the lake, dropping lower as he looked.

"It's Alan's plane," he shouted as his spontoos took the water. "That's the Snow-Ball Baby."

"That's queer," he heard sound as they drifted nearer. But no sign of life came from the plane so he hauled dragging at its mooring line.

"The 'queer' is frayed," "I'll edge closer and climb aboard."

But an abrupt interruption came to that movement.

A rifle barked from the lake bank and a bullet went whining over his head. As he looked up, arrested, a second detonation echoed out over the lake water and a second bullet whined perilously close to his ear. Then a voice, husky but authoritative, called across the water.

"Keep off that plane," it commanded. "Or I'll drop you where you stand."

The Flying Padre's eye, searching the shore, made out an unkempt and ragged old figure with a leveled rifle. On a rock piling up a moment later he detected a second and bow-legged old figure, also with a leveled rifle.

"Keep 'em off," was the Padre's warning cry to the girl in the cabin. "These fools are firing at us."

Then he turned to the threatening figures on the shore. "Stop it, you idiots. 'Not on your life,' was the husky, shouted response. "You take away from that plane and taxi in here or we'll blow you out of the air."

The indignant man of medicine considered that threat. But it failed to stir him into action.

"We're the Alan Slade," he demanded.

"What's that to you?" was the shot response.

"We're friends," called back the Padre, "who want to find him."

He could see the rifle-barrels, at least, he looked for him.

"Then you'd best swing in here and prove it," was the call came back to him.

"It's all right," Lynn was saying from the cabin hatch. "They must be Alan's old miners from the Kasakana."

She dropped into the pilot's seat and started the motor, her still indignant father balanced on one of the floats as she veered about and taxied in to the shore line.

There, as he waded ashore, the old man with the rifle regarded him with a single eye.

"Now, who're you?" was that old man's prompt challenge.

"That's not important," announced the Flying Padre. "I'm rather-know who you are."

"We're a couple of peace-lovin' lone-pawed Eskimos," he began respectfully to the name of Zeke Prate. And this is my bunkie, Minty Buckman, he looked over his shoulder.

"Then you know Alan Slade," cried Lynn.

"Sure, we know Alan," conceded the embittered Zeke. "And that's a bit of all right. But what's worry in us is why he ain't back here with his plane. She's been sittin' there day after day, and I don't like the looks of things."

"That's why we're guardin' her," concurred Minty.

"From whom?" questioned the Padre.

"From them damned swan-hunters who're up to some devilment round here we can't figger out. They've got a landin' dock and a plane their own hidden under a pile of brush over the hills here. And when we tried to sleuth 'em out they started slingin' lead like a bunch of Siam."

The Flying Padre's face remained thoughtful a moment.

"Could you take me to the camp of these people with the plane?"

"I'll try," he said. "You're ready to go right on the way."

"And you have no idea why those people are in this territory?" pursued the Padre.

"From where they've been strippin' and dakin' and pittin' along the ridges I figgered out they was after gold. But they ain't workin' in the right rock color."

"Supposing," said the Padre, "they were after pitchblende?"

"That failed to impress the two old lone-lime prospectors. 'There's pitchblende in this neck of the woods all right,' cooched Zeke, 'but what in heck would they be doin' with it out here?'"

"The Flying Padre had his own ideas about that. A plane ferrying a load in trip could carry a ponderable amount of uranium from that uninhabited interior to tidewater.

"But what good would that do Germany," asked Lynn, "or any other country on the other side of the world?"

From an unmolested port like Echo Harbor, the Padre pointed out, a disguised Japanese whaler or even a furtive Russian freighter could pick up the cargo and quietly carry it to Yokohama or Vladivostok where it could be transhipped and hurried on to the reducing plants west of the Rhine.

"Keep off the plane," proclaimed the Padre as his gaze went from the two empty-eyed old sourdoughs to the disappointing unresponsive face of his daughter.

"But this isn't helping us to find Alan," she objected.

The Padre studied the deepened hollow in her cheek and the sharpened line of the valourously poised chin. "I know it," he agreed, "but one seems to weave in with the other. And I'm wondering which approach will give the best results. 'You take the one we took,' interposed Minty, "you'll get results all right. You'll get 'em in the shape of four-course dinners."

"Then we'll look 'em over from the air first," said the Flying Padre. He turned to the two ragged figures beside him. "Have you oldtimers ever flown?"

"Sure," was the prompt response. "I can't be sure yet," was her none satisfactory answer. "If he wouldn't be away from his ship without some good reason." She stared at him for a long space. "And he'd herd 'em back to it if he could. That means he's somewhere out there waiting for us."

III. Practising Soul-Winning (vv. 32-42).

There is real danger that those of us who have a measure of leadership in the church may be quick to tell others what they thought to be good, not of it ourselves. This is particularly true in this matter of soul-winning. One is apt to write, preach and teach about it, and then neglect to do it.

The disciples had been to town for bread. One wonders whether they had talked to the store-keeper about Christ. Have you?

Jesus did not theorize about it—He really sought men for God. The first of women He had sent a host of people out from the city. He spoke to them the word of life.

This was evidently "group evangelism," as disfigured from the "personal evangelism," which won the women. They are both important, and belong together. Some are saying that the days of group evangelism are gone. We doubt that, but certainly the days of personal evangelism are always here.—Let us be busy about that kind of soul-winning —and God may so bless it that we have a real revival. Are you ready for it?

IMPROVED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By HAROLD L. LINDQUIST, D. D.
Of the Board of Christian Education,
(Released by Western Newspaper Union)

Lesson for January 17

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts set by the Board of Christian Education, Council of Religious Education, used by permission.

JESUS WINNING SOULS

LESSON TEXT—John 4:37-42
GOLDEN TEXT—He that reacheth righteousness, and gathereth Israel unto life eternal.—John 1:9:30

Man's need is the same wherever and whoever he may be. The Christ who met the need of the distinguished religious leader Nicodemus had the same for the poor-sinful woman of Samaria.

The incident at Jacob's well in Sychar took place when Jesus, leaving Jerusalem because of increasing hindrance to His work, went up thither. Unlike the Jewish brethren, who detoured around the land of the hated "half-breed" Samaritans, Jesus went straight to Samaria, for there was a sink-hole soul that needed Him.

Our lesson abounds with instruction regarding soul-winning, both in principle and in practice. We heard Jesus:

I. Winning a Soul-Winner (vv. 27-30).

The faithful and kindly ministry of Christ led the woman to faith in Him as the Messiah. She left her water jar, ran at the well to share her new-found joy with everyone she knew.

Since the first expression of spiritual life is testimony, the one who brings a sinner to Christ not only saves a soul, but also wins a worker for Christ. One fears that we often fail to realize the value of Christ's work. We should expect that the new light should shine forth into the world.

So we have a two-fold reason for soul-winning; saving a soul from perdition, and setting a life on fire that will burn as a great business. Why don't we do more of it?

II. Instructing Soul-Winners (vv. 31-38).

This work of soul-winning requires a sustaining grace which this world cannot give. Jesus by His own example showed His disciples how that strength comes from above.

He who had sealed Himself at the well, tired and hungry, to await the return of the disciples with food, had come into its possession. Today the Soviet fliers frequently finish off a damaged German ship by coming up from behind and sawing off its tail with the blades of their propeller.

III. Practising Soul-Winning (vv. 39-42).

There is real danger that those of us who have a measure of leadership in the church may be quick to tell others what they thought to be good, not of it ourselves. This is particularly true in this matter of soul-winning. One is apt to write, preach and teach about it, and then neglect to do it.

The disciples had been to town for bread. One wonders whether they had talked to the store-keeper about Christ. Have you?

Jesus did not theorize about it—He really sought men for God. The first of women He had sent a host of people out from the city. He spoke to them the word of life.

THIS is the story of an old couch that became glamorous and played a conspicuous part in a charming sunny living room. The transformation started with a heavy cotton twill fabric in a soft tan tone to match the background color of the bookish rug that you see in front of the couch. It was decided not to use any contrasting trimming but to accent the clean-cut box-like edges outlining the couch pad and cushions with a second seam on the outside.

When the smartly tailored cover was completed it was fastened firmly in place with zippers of the type that come apart at the bottom—one side being stitched in the seam allowance of the cover and the other sewn to the couch pad. Next came the stiff cushions to stand up at the back. These were made with an inside cover of newspaper tightly bound together with muslin bands, and then padded with cotton batting, as shown.

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a tremendous job. They take it to keep the body's blood stream free of an excess of waste material. The way to keep the kidneys functioning properly is to make sure the kidneys get rid of waste matter from the blood as fast as it is produced.

When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One of the most common and persistent headache attacks of distress, getting up in the morning, stiffness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all sorts of symptoms.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages are sometimes further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have had more than forty years of publicity. They are endorsed the country over. Insist on Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.
