Fertilizers Build Farm Soil's Supply Of Organic Matter

ORGANIC matter plays an essential part in soil fertility, but chemical fertilizers are necessary to build up the organic matter supply in large land areas, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in citing a recent statement by Dr. H. U. Turb, head of the Soil Science Department of Michigan State College.

Dr. Turk pointed out that those who advocate the use of compost or manure to increase the soil's organic content are performing a definite service. But the condemnation of the use of chemical fertilizer, he said, "some people are doing a distinct disservice to the nation."

"For efficient crop production," he said, "lime, fertilizers and organic matter must go hand in hand. Organic matter is dependent upon plants and plants are dependent, among other things, upon an adequate supply of soil minerals."

"The most effective means of adding organic matter to large fields is by an intelligent use of purely inorganic fertilizer. Dr. Turk believes growing a cover crop through the use of commercial fertilizer and plowing it under adds greatly to the organic matter in the soil."

Dr. Turk said no proof has been offered that crops grown without chemical fertilizer are more free from disease and insects than are crops produced with commercial fertilizer.

Need Fertile Soils For Health Building High Protein Foods

FARM soils must be kept fertile if we are to supply the protein foods needed for good growth, sound health and the creation of new life, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in citing a recent statement by Dr. W. A. Albrecht, head of the University of Missouri's soil department.

"Foods high in protein, such as meat, milk and eggs," said Dr. Albrecht, "are the very products of reproduction. Properly nature's complex creations through which alone life can flow."

"When a soil loses its protein-making elements either through overcropping or erosion, it grows starchy, or woody plants, if any at all. While these foods are filling and may put on fat, they do not cause growth in animals or children."

Many of our farm soils are reaching the point where they are losing their ability to create, Dr. Albrecht said. When that happens, erosion is more rapid and serious.

Dr. Albrecht recommended a soil building program that adds nutrient elements through the use of fertilizers. This, he said, will result in more production and less erosion.

County Agent's Notes

By Robert F. Spence

Spring Clean-Up Urged To Prevent Farm Fires

Seeking to enlist every farm family in its Spring Clean-Up program, the National Fire Protection Association today urged an all-out effort by farmers to reduce the number of farm fires which last year took a toll of about 3500 lives.

Property losses from farm fires totaled about $169,000,000 in 1950, said the NFPA which sponsors the clean-up drive, jointly with the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the State Agricultural Extension Services. With farmers being asked to produce more food to meet defense needs, and with the growing need to conserve materials and farm machinery, the nation can ill-afford such needless losses of life, property and farm output.

The Spring Clean-Up program should include the home and all farm buildings, equipment, and grounds, so that no hidden fire hazard is likely to escape attention.

Removal of flammable rubbish is recommended as one of the first steps in the clean-up drive. Stacks of newspapers and magazines, or rags, discarded feed bags, and the like should be cleaned out of every nook and cranny and turned in for salvage, said the NFPA. This step is urged for safety reasons, and because these materials are again needed as in World War II. Stored in the house or the barn, such materials are good tinder for sparks or for a carelessly dropped match or cigarette.

Farmers also are urged to make sure sheds housing farm machinery are weather and fire-resistant. With growing scarcities making increasingly difficult to replace equipment, phalt, asbestos, or metal. Electrical equipment also is cited for careful inspection. Defective parts should be replaced, including frayed cords. Cobwebs and dust should be brushed away from fuse boxes and meters.

Other recommendations by the NFPA called for checking lightning rod connections often loosened by ice during the winter; cleaning stoves, lamps, and lanterns; and cutting down of trees and shrubs near buildings and fences. This should be done at a safe distance from buildings and on wind-free days to eliminate the danger of flying sparks.

Flying sparks also can be caused by dirty chimneys. A winter's accumulation of soot can cause a chimney to spew sparks which may be blown long distances to lodge in woodlands or on roofs of farm buildings. Farmers who fail to clean chimneys and chimneys at least once a year are living dangerously.

Unlike the city dweller with a fire department as near as the telephone, farmers often must depend on their own defenses, and there is no better time than spring clean-up time, to make sure fire will not attack your farm.

There are also many chimneys which need inspection around the roof where bricks or stones have dried out and left cracks. Such are also many chimneys which need to be built up a little higher above the roof before topping off.

Dr. Morris Shragos of the University of Kentucky says there is no cure for allergy. Allergic sufferers, he said, must seek relief through preventive measures, since allergies are inherited.

A heavy crop of good quality strawberries in prospect for Kentucky growers this year, it is reported. A heavy frost on April 16 killed the blooms that were open but the loss was negligible.

Grain markets were somewhat unsettled during the week with wheat generally firm and feed grains steady.

April weather ranged from top to bottom with new records set and old ones tied. On April 23 the thermometer dipped to 32 degrees, the coldest since 1926. Saturday saw a peak of 87.8 degrees, the highest since 1899.

ROCKCASTLE FACTS AND STORIES

By RALPH GRIFFIN

(Continued from last week) The few citizens of the town who were not marching with this were, fiction, could who were not marching with...

Unfortunately, however, we are handicapped by facts. The mob of Klansmen placed ropes about the necks of Cummins, Gibbs, Smith and Kenk. Their hands were tied and the tethers handed to horsemen who started without crowding, there was only room for Cummins and Gibbs. The horses were driven from beneath the two men and with occasional rough jerks upon their ropes reminding them to keep pace with the procession.

recollection to show that there were ever any convictions, or even any trials. A touch of grim humor was added to the story as it has been related down. Three Mt. Vernon citizens had their entire stock of liquor hidden in the courthouse and a terrible thirst was upon them. In all the excitement and milling about they had no chance to reach it until the night following the lynching. When it became dark enough they slipped into the hallway and began feeling their way along. They knew that the bodies had been removed but their nerves were on edge and they were a bit unclimbed to question, "Is this trip necessary?"

It so happened that a number of village hogs were accustomed to bedding down for the night in the hallway of our temple of justice. When our searchers stumbled upon them the porkers resented the intrusion and raced for the exit with loud "Woofs," upsetting the men and scaring them so badly that it took a full week of indulgence to restore their mental equilibrium.

Insofar as is known Saunders and Jim Bethurum never met again, for Saunders was killed upon the streets of Richmond a few weeks later in a pistol fight with the town marshal, Gus Edwards and his brothers, Dan and John. Bethurum survived him until November of the following year, when he was shot and killed upon the streets of Mt. Vernon. The old gallows was never used again for its intended purpose. After several years it was torn down. Being well seasoned it was chopped into kindling wood by an enterprising citizen who lived nearby.

The old oak tree stood for many years, being known as "The Gallows Tree" and being carefully avoided by the superstitious who passed that way at night. It was finally blown down in a storm but its trunk lay at the roadside until the year 1937, when it was hauled away and burned by road construction crew.
