Lets Get More Milk From Each Cow

Each and every dairyman will certainly agree that to get more milk from each cow is a worthy objective. While milk production per cow has gradually increased nationally, one has to take only one look at "average production" and do a simple calculation to know where he stands with his pocketbook.

The statistics show that in Kentucky the average cow produced about 4,000 pounds of milk and 170 pounds of butterfat last year. In 1948-49 those dairymen who kept production and feed cost records with their local Dairy Herd Improvement Associations milked cows which averaged 7,738 pounds of milk and 318 pounds of butterfat.

The difference between the State average and the average of the DHIA cows will show quite a sizable profit in favor of the dairymen who has not only kept, but also used his records for culling, feeding and breeding.

At present prices the average cow in Kentucky DHIA is returning $100-150 (depending on the market) more to her owner for his labor than the State average cow. Multiply this difference by more than 5,000 cows on test and you can at least estimate a value for improved breeding, feeding and management of the Kentucky Dairy Industry.

This however, is only part of the story. Further study of these figures shows that with-in the group who kept records the cows producing only 4,000 pounds of milk actually netted their owners only about $20 above feed, labor and investment costs. Cows producing at the DHIA average level of near 8,000 pounds of milk gave a net return of $100. The cow above feed, labor and investment costs at the State average or 50% more than the DHIA average had net return of over $800 for her 12,000 pounds of milk.

It is quite evident that the dairyman takes his job seriously and improves the production per cow he can increase his profits. By doubling the state average he would equal the present DHIA average and increase his net return per cow five times. Each cow producing three times the state average is yielding about ten times more profit.

Pressure Canner Care

Like the good workman who respects his tools, the careful home canner puts a little extra time and elbow grease into keeping a steam pressure canner in prime condition.

A steam pressure canner is an investment that deserves the kind of care that will make it last, say household equipment specialists in the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics. Proper canner care also promotes safety.

Add it pays in a third respect, by turning out more satisfactory home canned food.

The following techniques of good pressure canner care are:

A dial type gauge, new or old, should be checked for accuracy at least once a year, and also during the season if the canner is used a great deal. About checking a dial gauge, ask the county home demonstration agent, or the dealer, or the canner manufacturer.

Wash canner thoroughly before using and before storing it. It must be absolutely clean if you are to get efficient and economical operation. Dried food, dirt, and hard-water scale on the edge of either kettle or cover will cause steam leaks and resulting loss of efficiency. Scrub the rim of both kettle and cover, using whitening and water if scouring is needed. Don't use strong soaps on aluminum. Use a fine scouring powder on any type of canner, merse the lid in water.

If the canner has a rubber gasket, keep it clean and grease-free. If the rubber in a removable gasket shrinks, stretch it carefully between the fingers to fit the rim. Some types of rubber gaskets may be turned upside down when they no longer give a perfect seal in the original position. If the gasket in use won't make a perfect seal, get a new one.

Make sure that openings to the petcock, safety valve, and pressure gauge or weight control are clean. If openings are clogged during canning, all air may not be driven out in the time allowed for venting, or the safety valve may fail to work when pressure becomes too high. The openings may be cleaned by removing a string, narrow strip of cloth, or pipe cleaner through them.

Petcock and valve should be cleaned occasionally and soaked in vinegar for a short time. If the safety valve is ball and socket type, clean it after each use. Occasionally clean the ball and the socket into which it fits with a fine polish.

After the canning season is over, be sure the canner is clean before storing it. Wash the kettle in hot sudsy water and wipe off the lid with a soapy cloth, then with a clean, damp cloth. Dry thoroughly.

Smear the threads of screw locks or thumb nuts with a thin film of any salt-free oil to prevent rust. Place crumpled newspapers inside the kettle to absorb moisture, and wrap the lid in paper. Put the lid on upside down so the air can get into the kettle and keep it sweet-smelling through the storage period.

The home demonstration agent has test gauges ready to check canners and glad to do this service for anyone free of cost. Bring the lid of the canner to help office, in the Agriculture Building, Berea, or ask her to come to your community.

There is no good substitute for killing weeds in crops other than cultivation. Some success has been had with the use of herbicides but the danger to crop plants is still great.

Tobacco planted with a mechanical setter should be cultivated immediately after setting is completed. This does much to loosen the soil and prevent packing caused by the setter wheels. If practical, use a small harrow-type plow or a five-toothed harrow immediately after setting. If the crop is set by hand, cultivation should begin as soon as the ground dries out and before a crust forms on the surface.

Lambs and wool more than paid for a flock which Raymond Walker, Graves county 4-H boy, started early this year. He bought eight ewes in February for $35 each and 12 more in April with lambs at their side for $30 each. Thus for an outlay of $640 he had 20 ewes and 25 lambs. Wool brought him $150 and the lambs $141. This meant an income of $900 or more than he paid for the flock, and he has the ewes left.

Potatoes now growing will be mature about July 1, and no matter how they are taken care of, become almost worthless soon after Christmas. A good plan is to have a summer-planted crop maturing in late fall, to remain usable until next year's early crop comes in.

Gorham "Strasbourg", introduced in 1897, is an excellent example of the ornate style of decoration. Rococo, which was first used in the Louis XV period, "Strasbourg" is characterized by curved lines and a restrained decoration of marine shells. OH MABEL - CALL UP RIGHT AWAY AND RENT TWO MORE LOCKERS!

Half the fun of having a garden is being able to save the fruits and vegetables you grow. And the best way to do this is to put them in a frozen food locker.

It's especially wise in these days of war tension to save all the products of your garden and enjoy them throughout the year.

Many families are renting an extra locker this year just to store fruits and vegetables. It's a wise precaution.

SCANNING THE WEEK'S NEWS of Main Street and the World

Johnston Urges Strong Price Laws; Price War Confined to Large Cities

BUSINESS AS USUAL—For some time the home town has been uneasy over the nation's economic outlook. Headlines in the last few days haven't helped his uneasiness any.

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston's charge that the nation is drifting on an "economic time bomb" that may explode into runaway inflation next fall, unless congress passes a strong program on the law books, caused considerable comment and worry.

Noted for speaking his mind, Johnston said that "business as usual" has an ominous ring to me at a time when men are dying in battle in Korea for a free way of life.

Shortly before making these statements, Johnston proposed a new wage formula pegging pay ceiling to living costs and permitting firmament of workers an immediate boost ranging up to 12 1/2 percent above the level of January, 1950.

The belief is becoming more universal that the government must take a firmer stand and congress must enact stricter laws governing prices and wages.

SWEET MUSIC—And while home towners tried to understand statements from Washington on the economic situation, the average small town resident read reports from New York, Oklahoma City, and Atlanta of red-hot price cutting wars following the supreme court fair trade decision with a feeling of awe and incredulity.

Tens of thousands of gleeful shoppers—men and women—rushed wildly through New York bargain basements in search for nationally advertised goods that had been marked down, some of it as much as 40 percent.

Most retail organizations predicted the New York price-war would level off quickly, with prices from 8 to 15 percent below the former fixed-price levels.

Trade sources, also, pointed out that the price-war was not likely to spread because most home town merchants signed fair trade contracts.

HOW CLOSE TO WAR?—The man on Main Street, who never knows all the facts, received a shock that sent a shiver of fear down his back as the MacArthur hearing continued in Washington.

Sherman said the orders were issued after Red Arthur told the chief of staff that the U.N. should accept an armistice in Korea.

RURAL BANK DEPOSITS UP—Rural banks, largely farmer-owned and reflecting farmer finances, have shown amazing increases in deposits during the past 10 years, a recent survey of seven states revealed.

One bank, in an Illinois town of less than 400 population, increased its bank deposits from $188,000 in 1940 to $5,490,000, more than 20 times as much.

PEACE RUMORS CONTINUE—Rumors of peace in Korea continued to circulate in many world capitals although they were denied by high government officials.

SAME AS REFUSAL—The Russians now say they are willing to hold a foreign ministers' meeting if the ministers would discuss the North Atlantic pact and U. S. bases in Europe.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

To keep snow from sticking to the snow shovel, rub it with a candle stump or piece of paraffin before using.

If you scorch linen, cut a raw onion in half and rub the flat side of it on the scorched area; then soak the linen in cold water for several hours.

If a black rayon garment begins to show dull areas, you can brighten it by rubbing the spots very, very lightly with mineral oil. That's not much more than a temporary remedy, though, and the only complete cure is re-dyeing.

When cotton is scorched, wet the pot with water and cover it with a thick paste of laundry starch. After it dries, sponge it off with peroxide; iron the article and put it in the sun for a few hours.

Rust on tools can be prevented in the first place. Heat two ounces of it on the stove, sponge it with five ounces of lard until the resin melts completely. Then add one pint of benzine, and apply the mixture sparingly to the metal parts of the tools. It will protect them against rust for quite a while in the dampest kind of climate.

THE WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

BY: DREW PEARSON

Graceful Style for Afternoons Toddlers' Outfit Simple to Sew

FORGOTTEN MAN MOST HOUSEWIVES don't realize it, but the honest meat dealers are the forgotten men in the big squabble over the price of beef.

Hundreds of these wholesalers and retailers have been taking their beating in silence because, they protest, they fear they'll be black-balled by the big packers. And they have good reason to fear the packers' wrath.

Said one meat wholesaler: "If I complain to the OPR, and the packer finds out, I'll never be able to buy another pound of meat. I'd have to leave the meat business and become a wholesaler for vegetarians."

Here is what the meat middlemen are up against: "This new scheme is aimed at showing up the price gouger and bringing an end to the black market. But, to get around the law, some of the packers are buying some of the biggest names in the industry—have now come up with a new strategy—forcing the lost and forgotten meat packers to accept tie-in sales, to buy unwanted cuts of meat in order to get the most valuable cuts.

Net result of this price gouging is that the packer is an intolerable squeeze on the wholesaler and retailer.

Friend of Big Business GOP Congressman Kenneth Keating of New York has emerged as the newest congressional champion of big business.

Keating's district, Rochester, N.Y., is a long way from California; it was he who pulled chestnuts out of the fire for Pacific Gas and Electric in California and sponsored the amendment which would have needed government power lines.

His amendment would undercut a proposal by another Republican, Herbert Hoover, who when President, urged that the Clayton anti-trust act be strengthened in order to put the restriction on "assets" such as factories and equipment in mergers that created unfair trade competition.

Presidents Roosevelt and Truman both followed up Hoover's recommendation and finally this important addition to the Clayton anti-trust law was passed by congress last December. One of those who voted for it was Rep. Keating of New York.

However, when it came time to appropriate funds by which the federal trade commission could get the amendment in operation, Keating had a mysterious change of heart.

He calmly rose on the house floor and announced the amendment was now championed by offering an amendment canceling $245,000 of enforcement funds needed by the trade commission. The amendment was carried by a vote of 73 to 49. And a law is no good without funds to enforce it, the law Keating originally voted for now becomes just so much printed paper.

Small Airlines Mid-mannered Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama, the conscientious chairman of the small business committee, has urged an ever present ruse from the civil aeronautics board to suppress a report lambasting the major airlines.

Mysteriously, a copy of this report disappeared from the committee offices and was seen by airplane, though the report "confidentiality" was not mentioned.

The report criticized the CAB's report closing down the independent, non-scheduled airlines on June 5.

ROCKCASTLE FACTS and STORIES

By RALPH GRIFFIN

For many weeks this column has been devoted, almost exclusively, to stories of violence and bloodshed. It seemed just as well to tell them all, then pass on to something a bit more refreshing. This seems to be impossible, as soon as one such story is out of the way there are two more to take its place. So, leaving a substantial number of our early citizens to be later disposed of, let us attempt to get along with something a bit more constructive.

Rockcastle County may be said to have entered upon its first era of industrial development with the coming of the railroad. The first entrance of the L. & N. into Rockcastle occurred in the year 1867. The Lebanon Branch had been located, but not built, as far south as London at that time; previously the tracks had reached Crab Orchard upon July 1st, 1866. This point remained the terminus of the road until Feb. 4th, 1868, when the line reached Brodhead.

Construction continued rapidly during the ensuing months and Mt. Vernon became the terminus upon Nov. 18th, 1868. From this county-seat it moved on to Livingston by June 30th, 1870. This town remained the end of the line for a decade while negotiations proceeded with other railroad lines, relative to a meeting place at the Kentucky-Tennessee State Line.

A contact being eventually concluded with the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad (now a part of the Southern Railway), a meeting of the two lines was arranged at Jellico, Tenn. Once started the work progressed rapidly and the line was opened to London by July 1st, 1882. The goal was reached April 2nd, 1883 and the first through train ran from Louisville to Knoxville upon June 4th, 1883.

Meanwhile, The Kentucky Central Railroad Company had begun construction upon an extension of its line, which proposed to go from Paris to Sinks and there join the L. & N. This contract was completed in 1883 and in the following year an extension was built from there to Livingston.

The L. & N. bought out the Kentucky Central in 1890, began double-tracking operations in 1907 and completed this improvement from Richmond to Sinks in February 1928. So concludes our dry statistical record of railroads in Rockcastle, but there are many stories to be told of this construction.

The majority of this county's citizens saw their first train after the railroad crossed its boundary-line. After the trains began to make actual runs down as far as Brodhead, almost everyone living in that section had an opportunity to see them and to know that such thing as an "iron horse" existed. When the first train made its way into Mt. Vernon a few months later, however, there were still throngs of skeptical spectators on hand to view the miracle.

A few years ago there were several people still living who remembered having been present upon this momentous occasion; probably there is not today. Eye-witnesses have told of the harrowing scenes which were enacted upon the arrival of the first train. Numerous horses broke their tethers and fled; children screamed and clung to anxious-faced mothers while even some grown-ups failed to stand hitched and betook themselves to safer points of vantage upon the surrounding hills.

That first train was an odd-looking contraption and might cause a panic even today. The engine wasn't much larger than those sometimes seen in public parks and playgrounds today and was decorated with streamers and the American flag. The smoke-stack was out of all proportion and surmounted by a large oval drum. What the engine lacked in size it made up in noise, with steam spurting out at all angles.

Immediately behind the engineer's cab was a tender loaded with cord-wood, which supplied the fuel for steam production until the line pushed farther into the coal sections of the State. The remainder of the train consisted of two or three diminutive flat cars, empty, and a couple of small O. coaches filled with officials of the road and a sprinkling of death-defying sightseers from farther up the line.

Those of our citizens who were able to do so now raised feeble cheers. There was a deal of hand-shaking and congratulations all around, a couple of railroad officials made speeches which nobody could hear but which were heartily applauded anyway.

Amid concluded the celebration and the time of departure was at hand. Citizens nudged each other gleefully for it was plain to be seen that the train was here to stay; there was no way to turn it around. But, to the astonishment of everyone the thing began to run backwards, disappearing around the bend with a great huff and puffing amid showers of sparks. Truly, said everyone, there would never be another such mechanical marvel to equal that train!
