Strawberries

At this time of year, after keeping the weeds out of the strawberry field all summer and keeping the runners from crossing over the middle of the bulk, it is a little tempting to lay by and call it quit until mulching time.

From now until frost the main work to be done is to keep the middles open and cut the big weeds that are close to runner plants. Supporting the roots with air just for a short time will get the plants back in their development from now on.

If you are a really ambitious strawberry grower you might try running the bulk of the runners. But do this only after you have the matted row you want. This will make better plants of those on the edge of the row.

RAMBLINGS

Time
This is fire prevention week. As a newspaper we want to underscore our support to this movement 100%, and more if it were possible.

We have far too many fires, and every effort should be bent towards diminishing fire hazards everywhere in homes, business places and forests. Uncontrolled fires are so destructive. They destroy everything. Only the ashes are left. I notice that many people use fire as a means to clear land and gardens of grasses and rubbish and underbrush. This is not only a very wasteful use of process, but very wasteful. Why not disc or plow under all available vegetable matter and add just that much to the soil. Ashes may fertilize the soil a little but it is infinitesimal in comparison to decayed vegetable matter.

Now that the season is rapidly approaching when the hazard of fire in forest land is greatest, we should by all means be prepared and ready to fight fires of any kind. A little flame can make a big one, and a very destructive one at that. Many of our fires are caused by sheer ignorance, but more often to carelessness. Most of the fires are man-made, and very few are caused by lightning.

F. A. ACTIVITIES

The increase in the number of whooping cough cases in 1953 were over five years of age. The best way to give whooping cough immunization is in the form of triple antigen which also gives protection against diphtheria and tetanus.

Whooping cough is spread by contact with some one who has the disease or by a whooping cough carrier who has recovered from the disease but still carries the germs. The disease begins as an ordinary cold, and develops into a cough which lasts a couple of weeks before the whooping begins. It is highly contagious before the whooping period.

To Days Health

The increase in the number of whooping cough cases this year indicates that too many and develops into a cough which lasts a couple of weeks before the whooping begins. It is highly contagious before the whooping period.

We are getting along fine in our new home. Both girls are in school. Ella Jo in High School and Mary Doris in Business College. They are near enough to home that it only takes five minutes to walk.

This is one place that deserves the name it carries (The Friendly City). I have never seen a friendlier place than this. We have met some wonderful people, especially in the church. Respectfully,

Trees Grow and Replace Themselves

Millions of new trees spring up in the woods every year from seed.

Trees need protection: Forest industries and other tree farmers spend millions of dollars a year to protect timber crops from fire and pests. You can help by always being careful with fire.

Trees are a Crop

Like other living things, trees grow, mature and eventually die. When old trees die and decay in the woods, everyone loses. Tree farmers harvest timber like a crop, and grow new crops of trees. Forest industries and other woodland owners grow timber crops as a business like farmers grow corn, wheat or cotton.
