Hackney's Corners

But now that she thought about it, maybe too quiet.

"Can't say though as I'd blame folks," she said. "I heard, but didn't say I said it, there could be trouble up at Mt. Vernon. A couple of them that was hanged was from somebodies around there. But don't say I said it. I don't want my name mixed up in it. He and mine try to stay out of this thing."

I remembered then the disgust and anger I had felt reading the official report that had come by rider to the camp several days ago.

"This is to inform you that early today 18 men, volunteers for the defense of Crab Orchard, were condemned as bushwhackers and hanged at Cumberland Ford. All of these men were citizens of the county and were necessary instruction on the attack that followed when the news becomes general knowledge to the citizenry."

We said our thanks and goodbyes to Mrs. Rogers for her coffee and fire and rode on westward from the river.

I recall we had rode nearly to the crossroads at Hackney's Corners when we heard the shots and yells.

We jumped from our horses and took cover behind rocks that formed a bend in the road. After several minutes of silence, and unable to see anyone, we decided the shots were meant for someone on up the road.

We mounted and rode along the twisting road almost to the edge of an open field, which allowed a view of Hackney's Corners. We stopped, dead and dismounted.

At the far edge of the field several hundred yards away, we saw about 18 armed men near two large trees. Under the trees were several men sitting in the snow.

"Wonder what they're doing, sergeant?" I asked.

"When we were near the group we saw all of the men carried guns. I did not recognize any of them, but I felt sure they were all from the immediate area. Nor did I recognize the seven prisoners sitting on the ground. Apparently, they had been taken prisoner from various areas of the state by Union sympathizers. They probably didn't know each other.

When we came close to the group they gazed at us only slightly before returning to their business. The next prisoner was dragged away from the others. His hands and feet were tied. A ropes was thrown around his neck while he lay making groaning sounds and kicking and twisting his shoulders and body. I tried to talk to the men, but they either did not hear or did not want to be heard.

"I noticed one of the prisoners was a young boy not more than 16. His head was down and he was crying. Two others were cursing in fury at their captors. The others were silent, fear frozen on their faces.

One by one the eight men were hanged, leaving only the young boy.

I went over to the youth. His eyes were full of tears and his cheeks were streaked with crying.

"What's your name, son?" "Marcum."

"Where are you from?" "South Kentucky, Please, sir, don't let them hang me. I didn't do nothing. I've never done nothing."

I called to the man I had talked with. He came over.

"Sir, I beg you. This is only a boy. He couldn't do very much. This is a terrible thing you're doing. Let him go."

"I am sure you have noble intentions, sergeant," he replied. "But I'm afraid there's nothing I can do. He was found with one of these men. He was doing their bidding."

I made another effort: "We'll take him back to camp. We'll find out about his activities. But don't prey on children."

He looked at me crossly and I readily saw his mind was closed. "Sergeant, we have made our decision. A boy helping today is a man fighting tomorrow. At Cumberland Ford, the Rebels didn't listen to the pleas of 16 of our men. We are not inclined to listen today. It's a shame, this war, but what can we do? Someone must pay for the murder at Cumberland Ford."

"And who will pay for the murder at Hackney's Corners?"

There was no answer as the bushwhackers grabbed the struggling, screaming boy, threw a rope around his neck and pulled him up into the tree. He twisted and squirmed for over a minute and then became still.

I remember it was suddenly quiet. The job was over. When I raised my head we four were alone. In the two large trees nine men were swinging gently in the cold November breeze.

Once again, according to Joe Jordan, this was the most widely publicized case in the nation of executing admittedly innocent men in retaliation against the enemy for supposedly illegal executions.

"There was no contention that the nine Confederate soldiers hanged at Hackney's Corners were the same men who had performed the hangings near Cumberland Ford, or indeed that they had even heard of the earlier executions. They were simply selected as the ones to be put to death in reprisal. This practice was to grow into the nation's official policy of retaliation against the enemy for supposedly illegal executions.

Today when the cold winds of November begin to blow and the leaves fall, there is nothing at Hackney's Corners but the cold winds and the falling leaves, and two rotting stumps, that are the remains of two large trees. From that day to this no one has spoken the words Hackney's Corners. On that November 5, 1862 Hackney's Corners ceased to exist. Its location was stricken from maps of the state, and its name was lost in the tragedy and violence of the remaining years of the Civil War.

HORROR AT HACKNEY'S CORNERS

Civil War Tragedy Destroyed Community

(Note: The names of persons other than well-known personalities mentioned in this story have been deleted or changed in order not to embarrass descendants who still live in Rockcastle County.)

"If I live to be a hundred, I will go to my grave remembering that day." So wrote Union Sgt. Allen Benson on November 8, 1862 in a letter to his aging father at his farm in Rockcastle County a few miles from Crab Orchard.

His letter echoed sadness, and reflected the depths to which over a year of civil war had plunged the nation. Sergeant Benson noted: "I see all of us reduced to beasts of the jungle. Though I feel our cause is justified, I also know within my heart all that I have been taught about God's mercy has been subordinated to man's inhumanity to man."

Sergeant Benson lived to go home to Western Rockcastle County, to teach in the schools, and to die, but as his letter indicated, until he died he remembered that black day of November 5, 1862, one hundred years ago this week.

Sergeant Benson had been called to patrol duty while in camp near Wildcat Mountain then in Southeastern Rockcastle County. He recalled the story: "I remember the day was cold. Some snow lay on the north side of the hills. I was waiting for news. Almost every day in October there had been a snow on the ground, and on many days it had snowed continually. I got up that morning when I saw John Gibson and me. I remember saying, 'Go away!' But the lieutenant was insistent.

"Sorry, sergeant, but you've got patrol duty," he told me. "One of our bushwhackers—excuse me, home guard—was here during the night. Folks are getting edgy in Rockcastle. It seems that business down at Cumberland Ford a few days ago, being talked around, want you to go over in the Hackney's Corners area and check around. We don't want any disturbances. Take privateers Jones, Smith and Walker with you. And remember to watch out for Confederate patrols and Confederate bushwhackers—excuse me, home guards. We don't want to lose any more men. We want to keep the population from getting upset. As long as things are quiet through here, the better off we are."

It would be worthwhile to note here that Joe Jordan, who is associated with the Civil War Centennial Committee in Kentucky, writes that: "While a present-day dictionary may define 'bushwhacker' as a guerrilla fighter at the time of the Civil War there was a distinction between the two terms that was well understood by military men. A bushwhacker was a civilian who (usually from ambush) fired at troops. Not being in any undertaking of military discipline, he had no rights as a combatant or he was a criminal and could be summarily executed. A guerrilla was a criminal, too, and subject to the same penalty upon conviction, but usually he had been a member of one army or the other, had deserted, and was engaging in irregular warfare as a member of a predatory band.

Writing in a humorous vein, Mr. Jordan reported that, Gen. Basil Duke said a bushwhacker was a man of leisure who lives in a wild and generally mountainous country, does not join an army, but shoots from the tops of hills or from behind trees or rocks at those who are undertaking to do as differs with his politics. It is his way of expressing his opinions—a guerrilla was, properly speaking, a man who had belonged to some army, and had deserted and gone to making war on his private account. He was necessarily a marauder." "In an official report in which Col. Clarence Prentice of Kentucky had occasion to mention bushwhackers, he wrote: 'It is a gratifying reflection that many of them will whack no more.'" Mr.

Jordan penned, "Both armies were merciless in killing bushwhackers and guerrillas and in this—provided they caught the guilty ones, they often they did without doubt—they were justified by the accepted rules of warfare."

Sergeant Benson recalls the four of them left camp a short time later. He recounts: "The four of us left camp as soon as it was light enough to see. We rode along the Rockcastle River for a considerable time. It was foggy. After about an hour of riding we stopped, got off the horses, and walked around, stomping our feet in an effort to get warm."

Below, the river was partly frozen. Looking at it, I remembered the days I used to play in the creek below the house, and how different it was here on this day. How lonely it was and how rocky and rough.

We four talked, but mostly I remember the men were cursing the cold weather, the army, and having to leave the warm fires at the camp. Later, we re-mounted and rode along slowly for about 30 minutes. We were by that time about two miles from where the Rogers place was just ahead.

Everything was quiet when we got to the front gate. Smoke came from the chimney and we all perked up. We were pretty sure Mrs. Rogers would have coffee. They said she had coffee, but not all the time for folks who took the wrong road at the Corners.

"Sure, there's coffee," she said as we went into the house. "Always got hot coffee. They take the wrong road nine times out of ten, so I just keep it billing."

Mrs. Rogers, in her 40's, with five children and her husband in the Union army, told us that we were the first ones that day. Yes, she said, things were quiet, but folks were pretty mad about the hanging down at Cumberland Ford. Yes, she knew they were bushwhackers, but that was no cause why Col. Prentice should be rounded up and slaughtered like pigs. Things had reached a pretty pass when folks could hang out of the house without being strung up to a tree by Confederate men. Yes, she remembered that something might be done about it. But so far as she knew things were quiet.

Council Approves Resolutions, Sewer Plant Site

KING AND QUEEN - Chosen King and Queen of the Mt. Vernon school Halloween Carnival were Joe Mullins, son of Harry Mullins, Mt. Vernon, and Vicky Carter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Carter. They were sophomore candidates.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS - Chosen Prince and Princess at Mt. Vernon school Halloween Carnival were Clinton Clay Winstead, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Winstead, Mt. Vernon, and Elizabeth Ann Allen, daughter of Arly and Mrs. John Allen, of Mt. Vernon. They were first grade candidates.

Two resolutions designed to speed up work on the proposed $41,000 sewer system were approved by the Mt. Vernon City Council at a meeting Thursday night.

The council authorized Mayor Carl Brown to sign an application to obtain additional funds under the accelerated public works program.

This resolution means the council will try to obtain as much free money as possible from the federal government. The amount could be, if approved, about 50 percent of the total amount of the contract. Exactly how much this would be would have to be figured after the contract for the sewer is let. Additional government money would not influence the total amount of the city's loan from the government. The loan has been figured at $380,000.

The council also instructed Crawford & Crawford, engineers, to proceed in a hurry to meet the deadline for plans and specifications, and to start construction on the sewer system as quickly as possible as required by the state and federal governments.

In another move the council agreed to sign an option to purchase a site for the proposed sewage treatment plant. The council will take a $4,500 option on land owned by City Councilman William J. Norton at the rear of his residence on Perciful Street. The plant will be located in bottomland bordering on Tom Branch.

Diabetes Week Opens Nov. 11

The Public Health nurse in Rockcastle County will again test individuals for possible diabetes during the week of November 11, which is National Diabetes Detection Week. The test results, according to a statement today by M. A. Shepherd, M.D., county health officer, will be a simple test on urine samples of adults with whom they come in contact during the week. The test results indicate whether the person should see a physician for definite diagnosis and treatment if necessary.

Diabetes is a chronic disease affecting sugar utilization in the body and can lead to serious illness and even death if not put under dietary management or drug treatment as prescribed by a physician. Groups most likely to suffer from diabetes include persons over 40, persons who are overweight, mothers of overweight babies, and those with known diabetes in the family. OUR SURPRISE

Letters, notes, telephone calls, and personal contacts to the Signal in the last two weeks has surprised us on the unanimous approval with which so many residents of Mt. Vernon, and the county as well, have met the announcement that the Mt. Vernon City Council has decided to go ahead with its plan to ask for public works funds to build a swimming pool.

The pool would cost approximately $60,000, and the $18,000 the city would borrow would be repaid through the many 50 cent pieces that would be charged for swimming. Under these circumstances, and if the pool were approved, still a big if, it would cost the city nothing. With this in mind, the council asked Architects Bayless, Clotfelter & Johnson, of Lexington, to draw up plans for a pool and process the application.

We repeat, we were surprised at the public's reception to the pool. A pool is, after all, a luxury for a town. It is also a symbol of an extremely aggressive community—a symbol that has attached itself in the past years to such towns as Danville, Somerset and London.

To make the surprise even greater, the Mt. Vernon City Council is literally "up to its ears" in a $419,000 sewer project which will more than occupy the time of the council for many weeks and months to come. That they would stop long enough in their busy schedule to consider a pool for the young people of the town is indeed thinking ahead.

Since Mt. Vernon became Mt. Vernon one of the most threatening and difficult problems has been keeping the young people of the town and surrounding community busy during the summer school recess. Until the summer recreation program was begun, they had nowhere to go and no way to keep busy. The only alternative has been to get into autos on crowded highways and seek recreation and entertainment in other towns; an admittedly dangerous endeavor.

We hope the city council continues in its efforts to get approval for the pool. We don't believe it will live to regret the loss of some of its time. For when the sewers are built, and the elections are over, and the Christmas plans are past, and the winter problems are solved, there will remain that ever important and haunting question of: What are we going to do with our young people who have nothing to do this summer?

A pool will be another forward step toward answering this question.
