"When I remember all my mother's housework," adds Mrs. Elliott, "I'm amazed at how little I have to do. Electric heat doesn't seem to make any dirt at all."

"Before you buy, build or remodel get the facts on electric heat costs from our local office. Flameless electric heat won't burn a hole in your pocket!"

4-H Report

By: Mrs. Faith Plummer, Area Extension Agent In Youth

The Wilderness Trail Area 4-H dairy program has been expanded in 1969 to include not only boys and girls from dairy farm families but other boys and girls, rural area youth, 9-19 years of age, interested in carrying an animal project or activity in 4-H club work. The program brings to 4-H youth the latest production techniques, information on selection and showing dairy animals and for the first time, for rural and urban youth alike, dairy judging. Dairy judging provides one of the first opportunities for a young boy or girl to be trained in making a decision. In any chosen vocation a person must be able to observe, compare, draw conclusions, formulate a decision, and be prepared to present his case. Thus it is in dairy judging training where boys and girls receive in judging, planning, preparing, and delivering reasons orally.

This year there are many incentives for boys and girls to carry a dairy project and take part in dairy judging. County project winners are awarded medals, a $50 saving bond for the state winner, trip to the National 4-H Congress in Chicago and six $600 scholarships for national winners. Boys and girls taking part in the dairy judging and who receive training will be eligible to take part in the state 4-H dairy judging project at the University of Kentucky Coldstream farm, August 5 and 6. A banquet, an overnight stay, and a tour of the bluegrass area will be on the agenda for those that qualify to judge in the state event which will include juniors and seniors.

The four that place the highest in 4-H judging in Lexington will represent Kentucky in the 4-H dairy judging contest at the North American Dairy Show, Columbus, Ohio. The next four will represent Kentucky at the International Livestock Show in Chicago and the third team of four will be in 4-H dairy judging contest at the Mid-South Fair at Memphis. Judging at Lexington will be on an individual basis and not as a county unit.

Dairy judging training will be offered in all counties in the Wilderness Trail Area where boys and girls want to take the 4-H activity according to Wilbert Easley, Area Extension Specialist. All boys and girls interested in the dairy project, and dairy judging contact Faith Plummer, Rockcastle County Youth Agent, who will make the necessary arrangements.

It seems that the rate of speed is a quality most people readily admit in the performance of an automobile. When a car sets a new speed record, it becomes quite famous, and its set record is of some importance in the history books of the automobile industry.

The Stanley Steamer, was one such automobile, for it established a world's speed record of 127 miles per hour in 1906. This was exceptional performance, considering the car had only a 30-horsepower motor and its record is still to be excelled by any car with less than 30-horsepower.

Social Security News

Are you one of a number of farmers in the Rockcastle area who are not getting social security credit for their earnings? James Mustian, social security officer-in-charge, said today that some farmers do not file tax returns because they don't earn enough to owe income tax. These farmers are losing social security protection that they will need someday - or that their families may need tomorrow. Mustian said even if a self-employed farmer does not have enough income to file tax returns, he may still need to file a tax return in order to receive social security credits. If a farmer's gross profit is $600 or more and his net profit is $400 or more the law says he must report his income for social security and pay the social security tax on his net earnings, Mustian pointed out.

If he has a net profit of less than $400, or even a loss, but had a gross profit of at least $600, he may file, using what is known as the optional method, and receive social security credits for his earnings. Under the optional method of filing, Mustian said, a farmer whose gross profit is between $600 and $2,400 may report and get social security credit for two-thirds of his gross, regardless of the amount of his net income.

If his gross profit is over $2,400, but his net is less than $1,600, he may nevertheless report and get credit for 1,600.

Mustian said that a farmer who has not reported his earnings for social security has about 3 years to make the report, pay the back taxes due, and get the earnings credited to his social security record. A recent case in which a young farmer was killed in a tractor accident already illustrates the need for reporting earnings. Mustian said. The farmer left a wife and three young children. He had had a number of bad years in a row, with his expenses eating into his profits. But he had used the optional method and gotten social security credit for two-thirds of his gross earnings. Most important, he didn't return even though he filed a return even though he didn't owe any income tax. The family is receiving benefits of $115.00 a month, benefits they would be getting if he had not understood the value of social security protection and provided for his family. Mustian said farmers who need additional information about social security can write the Somerset Social Security Office and ask for booklet number 32.

Area Agent's Notes

BY: H. Lee Durham
Area Extension Agent
Feeding Sows and Gilts
During Gestation

Feed sows and gilts according to condition with about 4 pounds per day of a 15% to 16% protein ration. Be sure ration also supplies adequate amount of vitamins and minerals for sow to build up reserve needed during lactation.

Animals should be in a gaining, but not fattening condition. This means they should usually gain from 50 to 75 pounds during gestation, depending on their condition at breeding. Individual feeding stalls are helpful when limiting feeding sows and gilts. Stalls can be built from lumber, pipe, chain link fence, or almost anything that can withstand rooting and showing.

Giant Bark Aphids Are Attacking Shade Trees

Giant bark aphids are swarming over many varieties of shade trees now, says H. Lee Durham, area Extension Specialist. When they are numerous, these insects can cause severe damage to twigs and small limbs.

Most aphids are so small they are hard to see, but the giant bark aphid can be spotted easily. Durham notes. They are about a quarter-inch long, blackish or grayish in color, and soft-bodied. When crushed, they leave a purple stain on crushed grapes.

Control measures to use are Lindane or Malathion. Follow label directions carefully for rates, mixing and safety precautions. For more information on controlling giant bark aphids, check at the Rockcastle county Extension office in Mt. Vernon.

Sod Webworms May Be Special Lawn Problems This Year

The sod webworm may be a special problem in Kentucky lawns this year, warns Dr. Rudy Scheiber, UK Extension Service entomologist.

An unusual situation last year resulted in large numbers of over-wintering webworms. Thus, the first generation of this pest probably will be larger than usual this year, and con-rol measures will be especially important. In Kentucky, there are about two-and-a-half generations of the sod webworms, so usually enough to control this insect.

Watch for these insects in their moth stage and spray the lawn with carbaryl (Sevin) or Diazinon 10-14 days after the moths are most plentiful, Scheiber recommends.

When moths are present, they are stirred from their hiding places in the grass as you walk on the lawn. They fly in a jerky, zig-zag manner and then quickly return to the grass to hide. At night, they're attracted to house lights, which are good places to check for the moth's appearance.

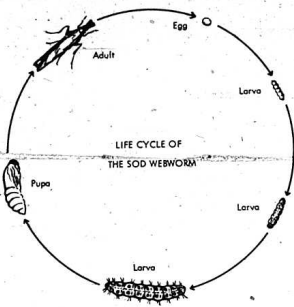

Moths lay eggs which hatch into webworms (the larval stage) in a week or so; hatching time and webworm development are influenced by weather conditions. These larvae cause lawn damage by clipping grass blades close to the ground. As the larvae grow, it clips an area of the lawn about the size of a baseball or larger. During dry weather, this area turns brown and dies.

"Homeowners often make the mistake of treating their lawn when dead spots appear or when the moths are most plentiful, but treatments at these times usually are not effective," Scheiber points out.

"The recommended insecticides lose their killing power after a short time, so it is important to spray while the larvae are feeding. This is why you should check for the moths and spray 10-14 days after you see the largest number, thus giving the larvae time to hatch from eggs laid by the moths."

For detailed information on evaluating webworm infestations and on when and how to treat, see county Extension office for the UK publication on "Sod Webworms and Their Control" (Misc. 363-A).

Scheiber explains that a special sod webworm problem is expected in Kentucky lawns this year because of an unusual situation last year. "In 1968, early weather conditions delayed the development of some of these insects, causing a great overlap of generations. "During most of the season last year, the moths were not very numerous, and all stages of the insect were moderate in number all the time. Because of this, lawns needed treatment more often than usually to give protection; most homeowners sprayed only the usual two times, thus allowing the webworms population to increase. "The largest moth flight was in early September last year in typical year, this is the time of the smallest flight. The large September flight produced a large number of over-wintering larvae, which are developing into the moths that are appearing now. "Since this first generation will be larger than usual, it is especially important to treat your lawn 10-14 days after the flight reaches its peak," he says. Scheiber expects the sod webworm's behavior to be more typical this year than in 1968. "Two treatments probably will be enough for control in 1969 even though the populations will be large," he concludes.
