

Old-Timers To Perform At Saltpetre Cave July 23

Said by many visitors to be the most perfect theatre ever to be formed by the hand of nature, Echo Auditorium, inside Great Saltpetre Cave, will get its first test as a real theatre on the afternoon of July 23, when John Lair and many of the old, original Renfro Valley performers gather there to present a full length show with a stage full of real talent.

People visiting the Cave for the first time are amazed to find the big room with a seating capacity of fifteen hundred people, a dome-shaped ceiling more than fifty feet high, a natural stage with dressing rooms at the back—all as if planned and created millions of years ago for use as a theatre. Comfortable seats have been provided, the stage is well lighted, the acoustics are second only to Salt Lake City Tabernacle and the air-conditioning is natural and perfect.

On the stage will be such old-time favorites as Emory Martin, one armed banjo player, Claude

A LOOK BACK THROUGH THE YEARS-- Ray Sosby, Claude Sweet, Old Joe Clark, Dick Dickinson, Claude Sweet.

Sweet, Lily May and the Coon Creek Girls, Roy Davidson, Coy Priddy, Redbud Trio and many other old favorites not seen here for some time. Among old-timers still in the vicinity will be Old Joe Clark, B. Lucas, Baker Brothers, Plick Moberly, Dick Dickinson and others, in addition to some local talent in the vicinity of the cave. There will be a stage full of talent putting on a show you'll always remember in a setting you'll never forget.

The show will go on at 3:30 p.m. and be continuous. Price of admission will include a full tour of the cave either before or after the show.

You are invited to spend the day. Bring a picnic lunch and make it a family affair. Plenty of free parking, shady picnic grounds, a large shelter house just completed, wading pools and children's playground. The old stage coach, a genuine Wells Fargo that once saw service in the Wild West, will be available for rides for the children during the day.

Brown Recluse Spider Can Infiltrate Painful Bite

Rockcastle County residents are urged to watch out for the brown recluse spider, an insect which was first reported in western Kentucky in 1965 and has been moving across the state since that time. The brown recluse can inflict a painful and poisonous bite. The bite can result in an ulcerous sore that may take months to heal, especially if prompt medical attention is neglected. In some cases, death may result from the bite.

The brown recluse looks like several other common house spiders. A full grown brown recluse is about four-tooths inches long. The spiders are usually a rich brown color but the color varies from light tan to dark brown. The section of the body that bears the legs has a dark fiddle-shaped design on it, and therefore, the insect is sometimes called a fiddle spider. It builds no trap web and it is a shy spider, hunting down its prey at night. During the day it hides in darkened areas such as closets, shoes and pockets of clothes.

In 1965 the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture first began receiving brown recluse specimens for identification from the western part of the state. As the spider became more known to the public there was an eastward spread of verified spider reports. By the end of 1968 the spider seemed to have ceased its spread, stopping at the edge of the Bluegrass region, except for two specimens found by the same person in Berea that year. There was no additional spread of the recluse noted in 1969. In 1970 two new counties south of the Bluegrass region reported the spider.

In the past month a bite case from a brown recluse was reported in Lexington. Several specimens were also collected from a University of Kentucky storage building. Thus it appears the spider has now moved into the Bluegrass region.

More information on identification and control of the brown recluse is available from the Rockcastle County Extension office or the University of Kentucky Department of Entomology.

Hot Weather Causes

Stress on Livestock

Farmers know that hot summer weather can cause problems for livestock. Most livestock do not adjust readily to high temperatures. Hogs especially are vulnerable to heat stress when closely confined in a vehicle, building or pen. A careful study of the relationship of hog deaths during the marketing process shows that high temperatures, especially when combined with high relative humidity, cause unusually large losses of animals.

Research has shown that an index figure which combines both temperature and relative humidity can provide a measure of heat stress to livestock, particularly animals that are confined or being loaded and transported. This combination figure is called the livestock weather safety index.

This index is divided into four categories depending on the effect which the weather is expected to have on the animals. In the safe category, temperature and humidity are expected to remain below the critical values so no losses occur. As the temperature and humidity increase to higher levels, a marginal category is reached. At a temperature of 89 degrees and with humidity of 80 percent the danger category is reached and at this point it has been observed that livestock losses in transit increase by 25 percent. If the temperature rises another 10 degrees up into the mid 90's, the emergency category is reached, and livestock losses in transit increase by 45 per cent.

Each morning at 6 a.m., the National Weather Service prepares a special forecast for stockmen in Kentucky telling them which category the index is expected to be in. This forecast is made available to all radio and television stations so they can broadcast it to their farm listeners. Along with the forecast, extension information from the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture is included with reminders on how to keep livestock cool during these hot periods and prevent heat stress from developing.

If you are shipping livestock during hot weather, try to ship early in the morning or during the late evening when temperatures are coolest and the sun is low. Don't hurry or run the animals during the loading and unloading process. This reduces them and increases chances of heat stress developing. Avoid intermixing strange animals to reduce the tendency for them to fight among themselves. Provide an adequate amount of fresh, cool water in the pens. If you must ship during the middle of a warm day, use a covered truck which is well-ventilated and avoid stopping enroute.

Special attention to these details can significantly reduce the loss of stock due to heat stress and add extra dollars to your livestock operations.

Watch Out for Black Shank on Your Tobacco

Are you having trouble with black shank on your tobacco this year? Black shank is a widespread problem this year, worse than it has been in several years. This is probably because of the heavy rains and flooding earlier in the year. Water is one of the main carriers of the disease, and it spreads rapidly during wet weather.

You should be on the lookout for the disease, because even though it might affect only a few plants this year, it could grow into a much bigger problem next year if no control measures are taken.

The most economical and effective means of controlling

Doors opening for the elderly They're on the inside now

Federal and state programs for the aged have opened the door to a new life for many elderly Kentuckians. Senior Citizen Centers, such as the one in Franklin County, provide educational opportunities, recreational activities, free transportation, health services, and hot meals. The centers are having open house this month, which has been proclaimed "Senior Citizens Month" by Governor Wendell Ford.

black shank is through crop rotations, then the only recommended control is the use of black shank resistant varieties.

If you don't have black shank on your farm, don't get it. Make sure you set plants from a black shank free area. Be sure tools and equipment are free of black shank, especially if you borrow them. If you lend your tools, be sure they are used in an unflooded field or clear them before bringing them back to your farm. Use a naban solution for cleaning tools and equipment. Be sure weedy you use for setting and irrigating is not contaminated with black shank. Don't let visitors bring infested dirt close to your farm on their shoes, equipment or vehicles. Make sure the manure, tobacco stalks, or barn sweepings you spread on your tobacco ground is not infested.

The Rockcastle County Extension office has more information on crop rotation and on selecting resistant tobacco varieties.

NEW CHILD WELFARE HOMES UNUSED, OFFICIALS PLEADED

The Department of Child Welfare has set up eight new privately owned homes for housing juveniles and DCW workers are pleased that they haven't been used.

Called emergency resource homes, they are designed to provide temporary shelter for very young delinquents—wayward and truant children who have been committed to Child Welfare.

The department time to arrange their placement in another setting, such as a foster home. Although the homes were established over a month ago, no child committed to Child Welfare has been placed in them. Jim Roberts, a juvenile services specialist for the department, said this is indicative of the success of Child Welfare programs, as far as finding immediate placement for juveniles and providing alternatives to commitment are concerned.

Although Roberts said he was "surprised" that the homes have not been used yet, he pointed out that the department does not receive as many commitments during the summer as during the months school is in session because they do not receive truants.

The emergency resource homes were established as a result of legislation passed by the 1972 General Assembly, which prohibited placing delinquents under 11 years of age and truant, dependents and wayward children in institutions operated for delinquents.

Because the homes are temporary shelters, the maximum length of stay is 30 days. People committed to Child Welfare paid $100 per month as well as $4 a day for each child staying there. No more than four children are allowed to stay in a home at any one time.

The Department of Child Welfare now has three types of institutions for juveniles: the resource homes, homes for dependent or neglected children, and institutions for delinquents over ten years of age.

Roberts said, however, that the department now believes, "Your problems aren't solved by placing kids in an institution. Our highest success rate is with kids on probation."

STATE TO REGISTER WELFARE RECIPIENTS FOR JOBS

Next month Kentucky will begin registering able-bodied welfare recipients for jobs, according to state Economic Service Commissioner Gail S. Huecker.

About 25 per cent of those on the rolls of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) will be required to register under a new federal law which became effective July 1.

The new law requires able-bodied welfare recipients to sign up for work or job training and offers tax incentives to business firms to induce them to hire such persons.

Under the law, lists of those who register will be turned over to local employment offices, which will be responsible for interviewing the recipients, finding them jobs or assigning them to training.

Once the plan is underway, either the local employment offices or social workers will check on whether the recipients have jobs and how the jobs affect their welfare status, and will help them with any problems such as child-care needs.

As of April 30, Kentucky had an AFDC caseload of 40,476 families, representing 144,344 individuals, Mrs. Huecker said. She said about 75 per cent of them will be exempt from registering for jobs for various reasons such as having children under six years old, being incapacitated or lacking available day-care services.

COMMUNITY RESOURCES FOR EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING EFFORT), a similar job-training program, has been in operation in Kentucky for two years. That program, launched by the 1970 legislature, requires some welfare mothers to accept jobs or job training or have their welfare checks cut.

parochial schools to get lunch funds. Funds allocated for the School Lunch Program by the 1972 General Assembly should be shared by parochial schools, according to the state attorney general's office.

Controversy over the question did not arise previously because until this year no state revenues were contributed to the School Lunch Program.

Upon request from the state Department of Education, the 1972 General Assembly appropriated $600,000 for the program for fiscal 1971-72. It also set aside $961,000 for each of the following two fiscal years.

"We think that an appropriation out of the general revenue of the state would be of the same genre as an appropriation out of the general revenue of the country," Assistant Atty. Gen. Carl Miller said in his opinion.

"It seems to us that if the counties can provide free transportation to parochial schools, the state may provide a contribution to the School Lunch Program of parochial schools."

He noted that when Congress passed the school lunch law it made provision that all non-profit school lunch programs could claim the benefits of the act even if state law were a barrier.

"In Kentucky, state law has not yet been a barrier," he said. "Nor has the Supreme Court held that the extension of the act to include private and parochial schools was a violation of the First Amendment."

John Nichols' Frankfort Watchline

If you remember three financial landmarks from the outset of Gov. Wendell Ford's administration, it would be a severance tax on coal, a higher gasoline tax and the removal of the sales tax on food.

It may be time to pause for a moment and see how things are going along these lines.

The severance tax, of course, caused the most squawking from special interests—that is, the coal operators, some practically predicted the end of the world.

Well, the tax—4 per cent of the sale price or a 30-cent-per-ton minimum, whichever is higher—has been in effect since April 1.

The world has not come to an end, but the coal operators still are grunting and forecasting dire effects.

Their complaints by sheer coincidence, have come at a time when the coal market was in a temporary slump. It's too much to ask of a man whose living depends on coal to take an objective view and avoid blaming the severance tax for the slump, even if it really is not to blame.

Having poked a bit at the operators, let us now turn to the state, which may be every bit as prejudiced—that is, determined to show, darn it, that the tax was wise and is bringing in every penny anticipated.

Well, it's not as hoped during the first months, but we can't prove it because the projection was for a year and no one can be certain it won't be reached.

Chalk up a draw on the severance tax argument, though in the next month or so we'll be able to tell if the market will continue to revive upwards as it has been doing for several weeks.

As for the 2-cent added gasoline tax, we disposed of that in the previous column and have discovered nothing to change our view—that prices fluctuate so freely at gas stations few motorists know what's happening and even that use 2 cents was added.

The sales tax on—our should we say off—food is another matter. Note the timing—it goes on Oct. 1, just when the U.S. Senate campaign heats up and just in time to allow Democratic nominee Dee Huddleston to praise the administration's devotion to the little fellow.

We won't bore you with figures, but the severance tax is designed to make up a good deal of the potential revenue loss from exempting food from the 5-cent tax.

So, if you're worried about the solvency of the state, fear not. It will operate in the black.

Or will it? We have run across Republicans who adamantly predict that the drain of lost revenue will force the Ford regime to call a special legislative session—after the November election, of course—and put the food tax back on.

Nonsense. Nobody is going to know that quickly about the impact of the food tax exemption—not for quite awhile.

The really valid opposition to it involves matters of psychology and economic justice. Which customers will care that much or notice their grocery bill diminishing perceptibly when the tax goes off?

If poor families will benefit from a tax break on an obvious necessity, won't wealthy families share needlessly in this windfall?

These are a couple of questions that should be thought about before the state throws away some $50 million a year in revenue.

HERE'S A HOWL—Did you know that somehow coyotes are crossing into Western Kentucky from Missouri and Illinois? Fish and Wildlife Resources Commissioner Arnold Mitchell took note of the events recently and added he's not quite sure how the critters are crossing the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers.

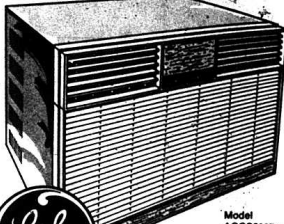

And you in Eastern Kentucky might be happy to know some bears are slipping across the border from the Smokies in Tennessee.

Those pesky tourists are responsible, so don't.

THANKFUL COLONEL—Kentucky colonelcies are hardly a rarity. Expressions of thanks are rarer.

So it's news of sorts that Taylor F. Gabbard of Tampa, Arizona, wrote Lt. Gov. Allan Carroll a note of appreciation for his honor. Gabbard is a former state legislator. By the way, he's 94.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor:
 We would like to take this opportunity to express our pleasure in having a third Doctor to serve the people of Rockcastle County. We would also like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation and thanks to Dr. George Griffith and Dr. Jack Lewis for their many years of service to the people of Rockcastle County.

As former employees of the Hospital, we can testify to the fact that they have always been on call 24 hours a day except for the times they have been on much needed vacations. We feel that this paper has failed to recognize these facts and to give credit to the hospital for the years it has struggled to keep going. We feel that if the people of the county had given the hospital more support and had made more use of its services, the financial condition may have been better.

Hunt - Dailey

Miss Donna Lee Hunt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Hunt of Mt. Vernon, became the bride of J.B. Dailey, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack B. Dailey of Mt. Vernon, Saturday, June 24 on the lawn at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack B. Dailey. Rev. Cecil Dailey, grandfather of the groom, performed the double-ring ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attired in an old-fashioned white gown of satin and organza with a high neckline and long sleeves accented with ruffles and a cotton daisy trim. Her headpiece was a crown of pearls and sequins and her two-tiered, finger-tip veil of illusion also had cotton daisy trim. The bride carried a cascade bouquet of orange, yellow, and green miniature daisies, arranged around a white orchid, with ferns and baby's breath. The ribbon streamers were also of orange, yellow and green.

The matrons-of-honor were Mrs. Nona Cox and Mrs. Judy Hansel. They were attired in orange checked gingham, with a low neckline and puffed sleeves, accented with lace and ruffles.

Bridesmaids were Joan Poppyer, Janet Hunt, Bonita Norton and Karen Cummins. They wore yellow checked gingham with low necklines, puffed sleeves, also accented with lace and ruffles.

Junior Bridesmaids were Connie Hunt and Sandra Dailey. They wore green checked gingham gowns identical to those of the bridesmaids.

The bride's flowergirl was Melissa Sebree. She carried a basket of petals and wore a yellow gown.

Ringbearer was Robert Todd Cromer. He carried the rings on a white satin pillow.

The best men were Dutch Clark and Billy Joe Howard. Ushers were Tim Hansel, John Hunt, Jeffrey Hunt, Jonathan Hunt, Hal Hunt and Mike Spillman.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Hunt chose a pale blue dress with a corsage of white carnations. Mrs. Dailey also chose a pale blue dress and a corsage of white carnations.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held on the back lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Dailey's home. The bride's table was covered with white net over a yellow table cloth. The traditional three-tiered wedding cake was topped with a pair of white doves with wedding rings in each of their mouths. Serving at the reception were Mrs. Arletta Norton, Mrs. Brenda Smith and Mrs. Irene Watson.

After a short honeymoon the couple are making their home in Mt. Vernon.

With Summer Sunbathing Come Freckles and Blisters

Nobody knows how many acres of skin peel off or how many billion freckles and age spots sprout every summer in the current fascination for sunbathing. But despite the use of gallons of sun tan oil and doctor warnings, thousands of people persist in reclining all but bare in the sun and every summer harvest a bumper crop of painful blisters. Actually, the good feeling and relaxation that come from soaking up the sun is about the only real value of a sun tan and, as one doctor put it, is more in the mind than the hide.

While true, as some doctors say, that sunshine does help clear up some skin problems and produces Vitamin D in the skin, sunbathing by no means is a sure-kill

The American Medical Association warns that overcooked blondes in bikinis may pay tomorrow for today's suntan. Prolonged overexposure, according to this authority, gradually and permanently sags and wrinkles skin. More serious problems may arise. Skin cancer, for example, which is difficult to figure, if not fatal, is found increasingly among chronic sunbathers, as well as farmers and others who must spend long hours in strong sunlight.

According to climatologists, from mid-June through much of July, the Northern Hemisphere receives its highest dose of sunshine of the year. About 65 percent of the sun's daily radiation -- including the sun-burning ultraviolet rays -- filters through the atmosphere to scorch the hides of eager sunbathers. This period of the year is therefore a time to exercise caution while bathing at the beach or basking on a blanket in the backyard. Otherwise, instead of a sun tan, the bather or basker may get a painful sunburn.

The medical opinion is that using some of the lotions on the market will protect against sunburn by screening out ultraviolet radiation. The best thing, however, is not get it all. And how can one procure "a berry brown sun tan without a sunburn? Follow the doctor's orders and don't try to get it too fast. Take your sunbathing in short, ten minute sittings until the desired tanning effects have been reached.

County know of the many extra hours the nurses and Doctors stayed at the hospital without being able to go home for a few hours sleep and the many hours worked without pay. Employees have always been responsible for more than the one job for which they had been trained.

In looking through last week's Signal, we failed to find any pictures of our two loyal Doctors or any mention of their names, but we do notice pictures of the three outstanding Doctors of the University of Kentucky.

We would also like to recognize the many hours of volunteer work given to the hospital by the Gray Ladies organization under the direction of Juanita Meece and the Candy Strippers under the direction of Betty Lewis.

We do understand that the Signal can not mention everyone who worked at the hospital, but we do feel that the many nurses Dr. Griffith, and Dr. Lewis have served the hospital has been ignored.

Norma J. Lyons, R.N.
Norma J. Mullins, R.N.
Cora Lee Speer

Ed's Note: The Signal in no way meant any disrespect to Dr. Griffith or Dr. Lewis by the exclusion of the two doctors from last week's paper. It was simply a matter of not being able to obtain photos of them since they were not at the appreciation dinner, although invited, and therefore unavailable for us to photograph. Perhaps we talked too much, but we felt that it was understood that everyone in the county appreciated the effort that has been called for and put forth by Dr. Griffith and Dr. Lewis in the years they have served the people of this county.) pma.

Floyd Owens Named County Coordinator

How and when did Mt. Vernon get its name? Or was Wab really named for W.A.B. Davis? Or was Disputants really named because of a dispute over what to call the community? Or was Wildie really named for two brothers named Will and Dee?

The answers to the above and questions and answers about every community in Rockcastle County is currently being sought by Floyd Owens of Mt. Vernon, who has been appointed County Coordinator for the National Place Names Survey.

and by whom, who first settlers were and any other information concerning the community or area.

Mr. Owens states that he has some information already but needs to confirm what he has and would appreciate any information either written or from someone who knows the history of the area. He stated he is seeking information on all areas of the county and some that no longer exist by name such as Bromo, Bummer, Withers, *Votzville Escarpment, Tarkin Branch, Cedarville, etc. and of course those that are still called by community names, such as Mt. Vernon, Brodhead, Livingston, Conway, Orlando, Burr and all others.

There will also be a separate section on Rivers, Creeks, Branches, etc. and how they got their names, how long they are, the starting point of each Creek, Branch or River.

Mr. Owens asks that if anyone has such information, please mail it to him at Mt. Vernon or contact him and he will come and take down any information available, and would also appreciate any old pictures of county buildings, landscapes, etc.

A county map showing the different named areas can be found elsewhere in this week's Signal.
