"Recycling"...

Years from now when historians look back on the 1970s they'll no doubt view it among other things as the decade when ecology became a household word.

All over the world both industry and individuals are changing their established patterns in an effort to work toward a healthier and more enriched environment. Commercial enterprises are altering production materials and methods, local governments are laying down new guidelines, schools are instituting courses in environmental protection and everywhere individuals are bundling newspapers for recycling plants, and changing their purchasing patterns in regard to food and biodegradable products. In fact, concern for the environment is slowly filtering into many aspects of today's life style in an all-out effort for a more ecologically wholesome and physically fit America.

With the internal combustion engine an increasing source of air pollution the bicycle is taking on new importance. As a matter of fact, according to Japan's bicycle industry, a major supplier of bicycles to the U.S., in Japan there is a widespread bicycling movement.

From the look of things, this movement is headed our way. With more than 80 million bicycle riders of all ages in the U.S., it seems that the wheels are already turning for a new kind of recycling era—an era when bicycles will be going to all of those places where only automobiles used to tread—in an all-out effort for a more ecologically wholesome and physically fit America.

County Agent's Notes

By: R. LEE DURHAM

WHAT TO DO IN JANUARY
January is the month of resolutions and every gardener may well resolve to have a better garden this year than ever before. For the most part, actual garden work is now at a standstill but spare time may be used to a good advantage in planning and preparation for spring.

Spare time can also be used to study the seed catalogues that always arrive soon after the Christmas cards. Make your selections of seeds, plants and shrubs and "get your name in the pot" early. Some seed houses give discounts for ordering early. Also, getting your orders in before the spring rush begins will help assure that your selections will be in your hands by the time you want and need them.

January is also a good month in which to catch up on your garden reading. There are dozens of garden books and magazines, not all of which, of course, are good. Elbert Hubbard once said that we write books in order to get things straight in our minds. Sometimes we think there has been too much of this writing of books, even garden books, but there are enough really good ones around to improve anyone's knowledge. Select a few, read, enjoy and profit from them. And don't forget to visit your county extension office and look over the booklets and pamphlets available there. In this supply, you will find trustworthy reading and information on many subjects which may stand you in good stead this spring and summer.

Your county extension office is also a good place to go for information if you are having problems with your houseplants. Perhaps the lighting in your house is wrong for the kind of plants you have -- some foliage plants do well in low light intensities, while others must have high intensities to survive.

Another common source of houseplant trouble is watering too often. Extension horticulturists say that house plants should be watered only when the soil is dry to the touch, even if this means watering only once a week. Using a little commercial plant food might also help your plants, although little fertilization is necessary for houseplants.

Since most foliage plants are tropical, they grow much better in a room with high relative humidity -- but high humidity is hard to maintain in most homes. The Extension horticulturists says that setting houseplants on a tray of moist sand or pebbles can help. They also warn against placing plants in drafts or in front of forced heat exhausts.

And if, in January, you would like to speed up spring blooming somewhat, you might try your hand at forcing hyacinths, lilies-of-the-valley, Narcissus and other similar flowers. Bulbs or pipe of these plants may be obtained at seed stores and preparing them for bloom is simplicity itself. After a pre-cooling period, usually all that is necessary is to put the bulbs in bowls of pebbles and water and place in some sunny window. Complete information on forcing blooms can be found in almost any good garden book.

REMEMBER THE RULE-CHANGE ON DES
After January 1, 1973, feeding DES will no longer be legal, implanting with DES or other materials such as Ralgro and Synovex is approved. Feeding MGA to heifers is still approved. This compound does

Court Buys Library Site With Rev. Sharing Funds

The Rockcastle County Fiscal Court met in special session last Thursday and passed the following motions in connection with the Federal Revenue Sharing Funds recently received by the county:

Upon recommendation of the Rockcastle County Budget Commission and approval of Dave Magill, state local finance officer, motion was made and seconded to approve the unanticipated income of $30,295, to revenue sharing funds account.

It was ordered by the Fiscal Court that a trust fund be set up for the deposit of revenue sharing funds for the purpose revenue sharing funds and Rockcastle County general government funds or monies.

Rockcastle Recollections

BY JOHN LAIR

The condensed history of the Fish family in last week's Signal was intended as sort of a model of the kind of family history we would like to run on the other families in ROCKCASTLE. We have started asking for such accounts early in the preparation of our book so that people who get started on compiling their family records as soon as possible. We hope somebody in each family group will do this so that all the oldtimers will find a place in our county history.

We had intended switching from family history in favor of other subjects which are to be considered in getting up a history of Rockcastle County but have just discovered something that justifies us in adding something to the Fish records, especially since it finds its sequel in a recent happening.

In reading Uncle Henry Fish's account of Jack Fish, who married a sister of Penelle and Bennett Hilt, both early settlers in the county, we learn that he lived for many years before his death on the Mt. Vernon Crab Orchard dirt road about two miles out of Crab Orchard. He was quite wealthy and before the Civil War owned forty slaves. During the war, Buller's army camped on his farm for a whole week. They built ten thousand panels of fence for campfires and carried everything off the farm, down to the last chicken. He afterwards became prosperous again, rebuilt his fences and restored the farm to its former condition. He was again a wealthy man when he died some years later.

In his last illness, he tried to tell members of the family where he had hidden his money but was never able to do so. After his death, several parcels of it were found, all in gold, amounting from three to eight hundred dollars to the parcel. The family always felt that there was more than what they had found buried under the hearth, the doortop, in the henhouse and out in the yard but were never able to locate it.

Reading this account, written in 1898, of a happening of many years before, I got an idea and checking up on it found it was right. You will recall the excitement of a few months ago when a considerable number of gold coins were found on a farm belonging to Mr. Davila Robbins of Berea. Apparently, they had long ago been buried in a stone jar in a field near where the old home stood. At some time, this jar had been broken by a plowshare and through the years had been scattered over an area approximately forty feet square by successive plowings. Checking the location of this farm of Mr. Robbins with the location given by Uncle Henry Fish in his writings of 1898, I was not surprised to learn that it was one and the same. Checking further and finding that the farm had years ago belonged to a man named Fish all doubt was removed and it now seems certain that the gold pieces found recently were some of those hidden by the elder Mr. Fish almost one hundred years ago.

And now for some other things we need to know. Who built the first house in Rockcastle County? What is now the oldest house in the county and who built it? What was the first business conducted in the county? What was the first mill for grinding corn? What was the first stage coach route and where were the early taverns? Besides the old Wally Phillips place is there an old building still standing that once served as a stage stop. Mr. Willis Johnson tells of an old tannery near Disputants, Richard Mullis reports one near Mullins Station many years ago and my grandfather used to talk about the old tannery in Mt. Vernon owned and operated by Rev. James McCall. Where were the others located? It was always my understanding that the tannic acid used in the tanning process would eat up iron and wooden troughs and that it was necessary to use those cut out of stone. If this is correct, where are the big stone troughs now. It would look silly to break them up and we know they wouldn't rot or wear out. Who can tell us something about the tanning process and what equipment was needed? We have seen tanbark spuds and have the old tanbark grinder used many years ago in the Mt. Vernon tannery, which was located at Spout Springs, Mt. Vernon, but who knows how hides were tanned, scraped, dried, etc. and what kind of vats or troughs were actually used?

Where were the old water power grist mills. I well remember the Adam Bryant Mill, the Langford Station Mill, the Jim Moore Mill, a mill up Brush Creek and others that I visited as a boy. I heard of the Solomon Griffin Mill, the Bullock Mill and a few others but know nothing of when they were built. How long were they operated and who operated them? In Rockcastle. Also, was there another horse mill in the county besides the old Hook mill on what is now Oliver Dowell's farm? Are the millstones and any of the iron fittings on this old mill to be found anywhere in the county?

Rockcastle has a lot of Civil War history, not in big battles fought but in skirmishes and camping and marching and foraging incidents. Jess Wilson, over at Jackson County RECC, has made a study of the Civil War in the mountains, including much he has gotten together on Rockcastle residents. Uncle Bill Arnold was in the Army and lived to who made notes on them so they are now available. Wally Phillips has some good Civil War stories and I am sure many others in the county do also. In the near future, we will run in the Signal a list of all the names we have found of both Revolutionary and Civil War soldiers.

Heading into the new year, we have some thoughts about how much of the governmental soul the state has been able to retain.

Other words, is the flow of power really in the direction of the state from the federal government?

To hear President Nixon and his supporters tell it, of course. They make a big point of claiming decentralization of power and the dawn of a new day for states' rights, and so on.

But, let's take a look at certain occurrences in the past year and see if this is so. There's the semi-humorous flap about the controversial non-merit system inspectors handling the early phases of the federal highway removal program.

Lame as the state administration's excuses may seem, the Highway Department says seriously that the situation was hurried-up and forced on it by federal deadlines. They claim they had to move quickly to hire those 48 "Skilled" and "Professional" inspectors.

If Kentucky had not comfortably? The state would apparently have forfeited some $5 million of its portion of the Federal Highway Trust Fund last year. That's power to the state?

Next item. Road construction was proceeding busily in Kentucky when along comes Congress and fails to extend the trust fund. The result is an indefinite delay in a number of vital road projects in Kentucky which our citizens had every right to see built. That's power to the state?

And how about the issue of water quality regulations, a thorny matter which involved public hearings across the state for months and finally a set of proposed regulations.

Yes, the environmentalists took a dim view of the plan, calling it weak and contending that 2,000 miles of streams would in effect be set aside for the lowest status of cleanliness.

No matter. What does matter is that the state Water Pollution Control Commission turned out not to be its own master.

The feds said firmly that the proposed regulations weren't good enough and the commission decided not to approve them. Power to the state?

The environmental aspect is probably the most vexing. With Washington tells Kentucky and other states to clean their water like crystal by 1983, it does out the necessary funds in dribsels of matching money. The inconsistency is frustrating, but the federal stand is to worry about the cost later and start on the strongest possible guidelines for the big cleanup.

The water pollution commission is no more... Everything is part of the Environmental Protection Agency headed by Tom Harris.

His attitude: he'll cross the bridges as he comes to them. Hopefully, the water beneath will be clean.

SANCTIONS, NO-- Looking for a safe prediction for the new year? We ventured to predict the teachers' lobby won't push for sanctions against Kentucky.

The Kentucky Education Association, of course, has been unhappy with salaries as a number of related benefits for years. It all led to a kind of showdown a couple of years ago, with a rather futile walk-out during a legislative session.

But the KEA knows it would be political suicide to press for sanctions, under which Kentucky would be branded as hostile to quality education despite the progress that has been made.

Especially since the teacher job market is generally glutted.

FLYING HIGH-- Ah! Do we detect a little managing of the news on how the governor's plans is being written? Press Secretary Tommy Preston has told the Aeronautics Department to keep silent on newsmen's requests for information about flights made in the two-engine turboprop.

From here on, all such information must come from Preston's office. The press secretary cited one newspaper's allegedly inaccurate stories about flights of the "ord plane."

We would guess Preston is right when he says Ford is entitled to have the full story given when reporters write about the subject.

That could be done under normal journalistic practices. The newsmen state the date from the Aeronautics, then checks with the governor.

But Preston contends the governor was bypassed. Oh

A change in program emphasis on the part of Extension agents and homemaker leaders seven years ago to provide quality programs to help improve family life in the Wilderness Trail Extension Area has resulted in a tremendous and most satisfying success. This success is seen in the statistically-proven 260 percent increase in number of women participating in the new programs. The women indicate they have gained much useful information in the new programs initiated and in following in the eight counties of Bell, Clay, Harlan, Jackson, Knox, Laurel, Rockcastle and Whitley. The success can also be seen in the number of new skills learned and now being practiced; the increased involvement in community affairs, and in the ever-widening homemaker concern in the field of almost every worthwhile human endeavor. An important aspect of growth in this movement has been the personal growth of many women from shy, reticent and unassuming individuals into well-informed, self-confident women who are now taking active parts in the affairs of their communities. These homemakers have shown their concern for others through the sharing of their new knowledge and skills.

All this was neatly accomplished through good planning, hard work and the utilization of public information sources, special newsletters, mass media, personal contacts, workshops and seminars. Through carefully planned special interest programs, few segments of society were overlooked. The programs were designed to appeal to and be of benefit to working women, young marrieds, senior citizens, disadvantaged families and public housing residents.

This method of approach permitted women with limited time and not interested in organized club membership to participate in programs that served the special needs or needs of themselves and their families. These special interest type programs encompassed a wide spectrum of homemaker needs—housing construction, physical fitness, garden-by-mail, drapery construction, estate planning, home landscaping, Christmas decorations and other. The impact was great last year 3,470 individuals enrolled in 95 of these kinds of programs.

As new homemakers became involved in these special interest workshops, many of them took such an interest that they later assumed leadership roles in traditional homemaker organizations and in 4-H programs. This too is complex age of technology where progress is often so rapid and situations change so swiftly that it is difficult sometimes to keep in step. Women are in constant need of help in securing new information and in the development of new skills that will enable them to provide a more satisfying and rewarding life for themselves and their number and membership be maintained and increased from year to year. One other factor contributing to the success of this stepped-up Home Economics program in the Wilderness Trail Area is the regular homemaker club system of transferring information. Through this system, club leader training conferences were held at county seat towns. These club leaders then passed along the information to their respective clubs throughout the counties. In this manner, club leaders receiving subject matter training became multipliers, capable of channeling information back to club members. That this system has been successful is to be seen in the fact that in the last seven years, homemaker membership in the area has doubled and more than 1,600 homemakers serve as multipliers of Home Economics information.

In the effort to make family life more rewarding in the Wilderness Trail Area, Extension workers and club leaders did not lose sight of the need for change-based on knowledge attained through research—in traditional homemaker program emphasis. Consequently, all programs initiated were adapted to meet these changes which was still another factor in the membership growth and attainment.

The changes in program emphasis seven years ago has contributed to improved family life in the Wilderness Trail Area. The efforts of the Extension agents and the homemaker leaders have resulted in a 500 percent increase of 5,436 homemakers participating in continuing Home Economics educational programs in 1972.

In Rockcastle County, 176 homemakers participated in homemaker's clubs, clothing construction classes and a Christmas Foods Workshop.
