WELFARE REACTS TO CUTBACKS

Charles Cain, Department of Health, Education and Welfare assistant regional administrator from Atlanta, recently spoke to about 450 members of the Kentucky Welfare Association at their spring conference at Lake Cumberland and outlined projected federal budget plans which call for the elimination or reduction of several social service programs.

"There is an erroneous impression that the outcry for human services is a bare bones budget," said Cain. "Actually, HEW will get an increase in dollar and percentage of the total federal budget."

Cain disclosed that requested appropriations for social services in fiscal year 1973 will be reduced from an already controversial $2.5 billion to $2 billion.

Can he note that an estimated 25,000 letters protesting the proposed guidelines for social services have apparently caused HEW to postpone implementation until their effect on existing programs are reassessed.

Visibly concerned, Economic Security Commissioner Gail S. Huecker reacted unfavorably to Cain's remarks, saying that the "new federalism" is telling people what they can and cannot do with their own tax money.

"We at the state and local level are intelligent enough to determine what Kentucky's priorities are," she said. "And I urge all KWA members and interested citizens to write their congressmen."

Commissioner Huecker said the "pressure must be put on Washington." Further reductions in a general and special revenue sharing moxie, she said, will have disastrous consequences throughout Kentucky and the nation.

"There is encouragement from those people who are attempting to decide how to best use the resources we have available in the Commonwealth to serve needy and deserving people," she said. "But we have to continually let our elected officials know that the money coming from that money sharing must be used for those programs which are now in danger of being eliminated or slowly phased out."

KWA President Ted Using labeled the administration's "new federalism" as a "strategy to divide and conquer."

"This plan," he said, "will inevitably put interest against interest in the fight to secure funding for individual programs and projects presently under attack by HEW."

Part of the Kentucky Welfare Association plan to turn back the siege of threatened poverty programs is a two-pronged counter-attack of canvassing candidates for public office and writing letters to local, county and state officials.

Questionnaires to be used by members when interviewing candidates for office were distributed at the conference. Information obtained from them will be published before the November election to allow voters to see where candidates stand on priority issues.

Some of these priorities, said Using, include population control, improved welfare programs, strict enforcement of strip mining laws, voluntary family planning, sex education in the schools, and greater consumer representation on state and local boards of health.

"We have no desire to support any particular candidate or specific political doctrine," said Using. "But we do intend to exercise our right to inform the public through the democratic process."

Tobacco farmers received $2,616,589 For record pounds

Burley growers in Rockcastle County received $2,616,589.99 for their 1972 tobacco crop, according to figures recently released by the County Extension and ASCS Offices.

The 1972 gross money received is higher than the 1971 figure by $700,839 even though the average price per hundred pounds was lower in 1972 than in the previous year. In 1971, producers received $52.00 per hundred for their crop, on the average, and in 1972, the average price per hundred pounds was $80.77. However, the difference came from the total number of pounds produced in the two years. In 1972, Rockcastle growers produced 3,289,555 pounds of tobacco while in 1971, only 2,865,109 pounds were produced.

163,322 pounds were over-marketed in 1972, which will result in the effective quota for 1973 being 2,727,958 or 438,690 pounds less than in 1972. However, the average quota allotment for 1973 will be 2,091 pounds or 100 pounds per quota more.

There were 1,451 farms with tobacco quotas in 1972 which produced an average yield per acre of 2,817 pounds as compared with 1,424 farms in 1971 which produced an average of 2,156 pounds per acre.

The 1973 price support will be 78.9¢ per pound as compared with 74.9¢ for 1972.

Growers are reminded by the ASCS Office that to be eligible for government support, they will be required to certify that restricted pesticides (DDT and TDE) have not been used on their 1973-crop tobacco.

Frankfort Watchline

Kentucky's public school teachers certainly did the smart thing when they voted not to apply sanctions against the state because of their unfortunate experience back in 1970.

Remember the Kentucky Education Association's loud demands for higher pay, or else? Remember that walkout during the legislative session? Remember the largely negative reaction of citizens?

Well, the teachers still are paying for that abortive move and they know enough to get back into the good graces of the taxpayer.

As Mrs. Louise Hite of Middlesboro, the new KEA president, said: "We move ahead with a complete absence of threats or vindictiveness."

That's nice for all concerned, and as Mrs. Hite also indicated, the stress now is on "public information" — or call it propaganda if you wish, which by the way is not a dirty word.

It all adds up to a more professional effort to get higher pay and benefits in the 1974 legislative session.

The teachers really did well under Gov. Wendell Ford in the 1972 session. They have little cause for complaint and some loose ends such as financing of certain proposals could come about next time.

But we don't think the KEA ever will regain the power it had during the 1960's, when it sometimes worked hand in glove with governors to ram through continual pay increases and benefits.

We know what the reply of KEA advocates would be to this assertion: Kentucky is way down the educational ladder nationally and must run to keep up.

True, but Kentucky's per capita personal income is far down the ladder, too, and other priorities for other worthy causes tug at the strained budget.

We really wish the teachers well, but never again should taxpayers be told in effect that they had better produce for a pre-set KEA legislative program or suffer the consequences. *****

Tally Ho, The Fox! Our hat goes off to Democratic House incumbent Terry McBrayer of Greenup as the foxiest one in the bunch in the primary.

Here's the story:

At about 8:30 P.M. on the final day for candidates to file for office, a potential opponent of McBrayer in Greenup County telephoned for some information.

During the course of that conversation, he was told that he was not properly filed yet.

That couldn't be, the man said, because he had filed many weeks before with the Greenup County clerk. No good enough, the respondent said, because under a new statute all legislative candidates must file in Frankfort.

Ah, the would-be candidate said, he knew reliably that McBrayer also had filed in the county clerk's office.

Anyway, the McBrayer opponent did not get to Frankfort.

Asked about this story, McBrayer just grins and denies he did anything to mislead his rival. McBrayer allowed as how he had filed in both places "to make sure."

Gets a fellow to wondering. How did the unsuccessful candidate know McBrayer had filed in Greenup County? Did anyone make a special effort to throw him off the track?

As they say everywhere—that's politics. *****

Right To Know? We note with some relief that Lt. Gov. Julian Carroll escaped injury last month in Nashville when a plane he occupied collided with a parked craft on the ground.

We also note with alarm that the story didn't filter through until the other day. And we ask: If the public has a right to know about occurrences involving high state officials, wouldn't this incident qualify?

When the second-ranking man in state government came close to injury in a freak mishap, we believe he had an obligation to inform the public he serves.

And, by the way, this isn't the first similar incident.

We're reminded of the night a twin-engine state plane lost an engine while carrying the man who now is our public safety commissioner and the man who now is commissioner of the environmental protection agency.

Do officials think news happens only when they hold a press conference and decide to tell us what they want to? *****

Lazy Athlete—That fuss about University of Kentucky athletes purportedly getting their term papers written for them reminds us of a true story involving another UK player several years ago.

Seems his theme, to be written next day in class, was typed for him ahead of time and all he had to do was copy it in script. Apparently the effort was too great. Our hero took the typewriter theme to class and handed it in at the end of the period! *****

Fellow Republicans:

In my past articles, I have stressed that our elected officials should represent all the people. At the same time, we as Republicans need to encourage more of our county people to register to vote in order that they might share in making our county's selection of officials. I am informed that April 30, 1973 is the deadline for voter registration. I am, hereby, urging all our good citizens to register and take part in this very important cooperative effort.

Speaking of a Cooperative Effort! I believe that our county needs some improvement in this respect. I believe that our County Judge should build and maintain a good working relationship with the City Council and especially with the Magistrates that make up his Fiscal Court. Further, I believe that the Judge is obligated to manage the County's budget so that it is balanced and in compliance with the law.

I believe that we, as citizens, deserve this and once I am elected, you may expect it.

Equal Opportunity Employer

Re-Elect

WILLIAM D. GREGORY COUNTY ATTORNEY

The right to vote and choose who will represent you in the various offices in your local government is one of the greatest rights an adult citizen has. This is one of the main distinctions between our form of government and that of other countries. This precious right is to be exercised by the citizens of Rockcastle County on May 29th of this year. I want to take this opportunity to present some of my views to the voters and to ask for your continued support in the coming election.

Since taking office as your County Attorney a little over three years ago, I have made a special effort to do my job as I would think the people of Rockcastle County would want the job done. My office has been open to the public and my home has been opened time and time again to those who have had unfortunate circumstances which required immediate law enforcement. This is what I would want from a public official in whom I had put my trust as a voter. This is how I have tried to be for these few years I have had the office of County Attorney, and I hereby pledge to continue this same policy if elected to serve for a second term as your County Attorney.

I will try to contact as many people as possible in those next few weeks and ask you personally for your support. I realize I cannot see everyone and do the job I was elected to do; but if I am unable to see you, I want to take this means to humbly ask for your continued support and for your vote in the May 29, 1973 election.

NEWS AND VIEWS FROM YOUR ROCKCASTLE CO. LIBRARY

Reds, Orioles, Yankees. The baseball season has started. Since the game has been popular here for so many years it is surprising to know that baseball was barely heard of until the 1830's. But by 1869 there were "professional teams," the Cincinnati Reds being one. These and other interesting facts about baseball can be found at the Rockcastle County Public Library in books such as David Voight's American Baseball.

Playing the game of baseball is explained by Gil Hodges, Joe Peppone and others in books for children, teenagers and adults. One player's experiences and views of baseball are given in Jim BOuton's Ball Four.

How to Coach, Manage and Play Little League Baseball and Warm Up for Little League Baseball are two books that explain Little League baseball from the coach and player's point of view.

A Wife's Guide to Baseball by Charlene Gibson explains how to tell what's going on for those who don't know very much about baseball.

Vida Blue's life story and biographies of other famous players such as Joe DiMaggio are available at the Rockcastle County Library also. tion of her liberties."

Our country has prospered for nearly 200 years with constantly expanding liberty because our common law tradition provides for gradual, orderly and peaceful change in our institutions.

It is to the courts that the individual citizen goes to seek redress and secure justice, not as a matter of privilege but as a matter of right.

Our courts were created and exist, not only to determine according to law disputes between individuals, but also to determine according to law disagreements between the individual and the government.

The observance of Law Day is fitting because it underscores the role of the law and the courts in achieving equitable solutions to on-going problems, including racism, poverty, environmental pollution, consumer rights and many other issues of public concern and import.

It is good to be reminded each year that the Law can be relevant and progressive.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Roland D. Mullins, Mayor of Mt. Vernon, do hereby join in proclaiming Tuesday, May 1, 1973, as Law Day U.S.A. In this community and urge all citizens, organizations and schools to give appropriate recognition to this special day.

ENERGY CRISIS?

the L&N hauls more freight more efficiently and with less fuel consumption!

The L&N is responsive to the needs of your community and to coming generations of American men and women.

THE ENERGY CRISIS

Today's energy crisis points out a dwindling supply of fossil fuels. More efficient use of these critical fuels for the movement of freight from city to city, is one essential way the L&N and other railroads really help.

ESSENTIAL FACTS

When comparing energy requirements for the movement of inter-city freight, modern efficient diesel locomotives require about 1/4 the energy of heavy duty diesel trucks per ton mile.

Actually, railroads use only 9% of the distillate fuel oil produced in U.S. refineries, while highway vehicles use about 17%. While the L&N and other railroads use only a relatively small part of the total fuel supply, the services they provide are essential to the economic growth and wealth of the entire nation.

FUEL-SAVING EFFICIENCY

At the L&N, we know something must be done to conserve fuel and to get the most work/energy from every gallon. We are doing our part by maintaining our diesel engines to assure maximum efficiency. We've installed new equipment and facilities to eliminate surplus oil leakage. We move millions of tons of freight with new advanced techniques that achieve fuel saving economies. Of course, there's more we can do and we are working on it.

Let's work together to help conserve precious energy for present and future generations to enjoy.

Wild Greens—With all the fresh, frozen, and canned foods now on the market, there is not the necessity of former years for gathering one's food from the wild.

There was a time, however—especially after a long winter diet composed largely of dried, smoked, and salt-cured foods—when body systems needed and desperately craved foods fresh and green. Therefore, pending the harvest of the first vegetables from early planted gardens, country people scoured spring pastures, fields, river bottoms, and sunny fence rows for masses of what was then called "wild salad."

But while this time is now long past, it is still deemed desirable to know at least some of these edible wild plants that can be gathered and put into the pot. They grow here, there, and everywhere, and are mostly free for the picking. Their food value and vitamin content is admitted by dietitians; their unique flavor adds zest and interest to meals; and the outdoor effort expended in gathering them tends to reduce waistlines, induce deep breathing, and develop little used muscles.

Wild greens grow in great variety and no attempt is made here to list them all. Instead, only those most commonly gathered in the past, and most easily identified will be mentioned. Of all the early spring greens, country people considered pokeweed at the top of the list. Tasting somewhat like spinach, it was gathered soon after emerging from the ground. Upland Cress, or "creasies," ran poke a close second in popularity. Then came dandelion, lamb's quarters, sour dock, evening primrose ("Speckled Dick"), broad-leaved plantain, peppergrass, shepherd's purse, wild mustard, wild lettuce, white top ("fuzzy brichers"), and toothwort which was also known as "crow's foot."

These were the mainstays of the old time greens gatherers and are the most common of all weeds used for human consumption.

Poke and cress make appetizing fare when cooked by themselves, but the other greens are best when blended. In this blending of greens, the bitterness of one is offset by the blandness or tartness of the others.

In gathering any of these wild plants for the table, it must be remembered that they are tasty only when they are very young. Otherwise, they may be too bitter or too stringy to be palatable. Also after gathering from the field, they must be carefully prepared before cooking.

The best practice is to wash the fresh-culled greens through two or three waters to get rid of any trash and dirt. Then each leaf should be examined thoroughly and carefully for slugs and other insects that also love to dine on these plants.

When thus prepared, the greens can be put in a covered skillet or pressure cooker with little added except for the water clinging to their leaves and perhaps a small amount of bacon grease for seasoning. Cook until tender when pricked with a fork, then remove and salt to taste. A dash of vinegar always adds to the taste of wild greens.

Wild greens go well with almost any kind of menu but, traditionally, they are eaten with slices of raw onions, crisp bacon, fried potatoes, and cornbread. Some wild greens fanciers state that a menu like this makes the most satisfying, stick-to-the-ribs type meal known to mankind.

Unlike many other pioneer foods, wild salad is not a gift from the Indians. According to some food historians, early American Indians held the same kind of aversion for wild greens that sometimes is shown by modern youngsters who, when confronted by a plate of spinach, wouldn't eat them on a bet.

But wild greens are good indeed. Some of them such as poke and creasies can be purchased in cans at food markets. They taste better, however, when gathered fresh from the

Nothing, according to old-time country women, perks up a "Dauncy Appetite" like a mess of wild greens. Certainly they make a tangy, zestful, and healthful meal, especially after hunting them on a warm sunny spring day when "the winter is past the (snows) are over and gone."

Should these conditions continue during the next couple of weeks, certain precautions and alternatives should be considered. Efforts to get the crop planted early before the weather and soil conditions are suitable for corn planting may prove costly.

Planting before the soil temperature has reached 50 degrees is risky since it may result in a poor stand and corn may have to be replanted.

Make sure the soil is dry enough to be in good working condition before starting tillage operations. Tillage operations on wet soil will result in poor physical condition of the soil that cannot be corrected during the growing season.

Should the cool, wet weather continue through the first half of May, no-till planting may be considered as an alternative on well-drained soils.

When soil temperature and moisture conditions become favorable, planting need not be further delayed because the fertilizer and herbicides have not been applied. An alternative herbicide system may be substituted for the pre-planted incorporated herbicides.

If the recommended phosphate and potash fertilizer has not been applied, 200 to 300 pounds of mixed fertilizers at the row at planting should supply the early plant needs. The additional phosphate and potash can be applied after the crop is planted. Nitrogen fertilizer applied 4 to 5 weeks following planting should be as effective as an application at planting time. If the corn has emerged before the broadcast fertilizer can be applied, precautions must be taken to avoid contact of the fertilizer on the foliage.

The longer corn planting is delayed by adverse weather conditions, the greater the risk of lower potential yields. Rather than plant corn too late in the season, consideration may be given to alternative grain or forage crops, provided the substitution can be made to comply with the feed grain agreements. An excellent cash grain alternative would be soybeans, whereas a good feed grain alternative is grain sorghum. If forage is needed, the forage sorghums or sorghum-sudan hybrids should be considered.

The later corn is planted, the greater the risk of insect damage. Consideration should be given to using a soil insecticide.

When to Cut Hay-Every farmer who keeps livestock needs a lot of high quality hay. Usually he can use more than he used the previous year. If you are wondering about the right time to cut hay, the following schedule may help.

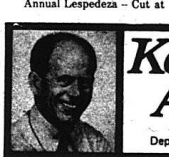

Alfalfa and alfalfa-grass mixture (First-year Crop) (seeded fall 1972 or spring 1973). Cut first crop at full bloom. Cut the remaining crops at five- to six-week intervals. (Older Stands)-Cut first crop at bud stage and the remaining crops at five- to six-week intervals. DO NOT harvest a cutting after September 10. However, you may cut again when the plants turn yellow after a killing frost or freeze. When you have a grass-alfalfa mixture, cut to favor the alfalfa.

Red clover-Cut at early bloom stage.

Straight grass-Cut from when plants are in "late-boot" to not later than when seed heads come out of the boot.

Mixed grass and clovers - Cutting time often becomes a compromise between the ideal time for the clover and the grass. Attention should be given to cutting before seed forms.

Annual Lespedeza - Cut at early bloom.

While Kentucky anglers are seeking their favorite fish from the state's bountiful lakes and streams, other outdoor enthusiasts are busy following the events and happenings of spring.

Some are observing the greening of the trees, the budding of wildflowers, dogwoods and redbuds. But it is during these trips afield that a great problem has arisen so far as the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources is concerned.

The problem is that many persons are finding young wildlife like baby birds, squirrels, rabbits, raccoons and deer. Quite often they mistakenly believe that it is an orphan, pick it up (having the best intentions for saving its life) and take it home to raise.

The well-intentioned people don't realize it is the parent in many cases is close at hand and is far better suited to take care of its own infant. The "foster" human parent usually does not know the food requirements of the young animal or what formula to feed it and how often.

Joe Bruna, Director of the Division of Game Management for the department, pointed out that even though the individuals have the best intentions they are destroying a great deal of wildlife. In fact, they are loving them to death.

Bruna said that, even when the foster parent is successful in raising the alleged orphan - when the animal becomes an adult, it bites, pecks, claws and scratches - and then it's turned loose.

When this happens, the mature animal has never known anything except human living. Yet, it is turned loose in the wild to fend for itself. What happens to the released wild pets? Many starve to death. And quite a few are destroyed by people who mistake the animal's unnatural behavior as symptomatic of a disease. Though the animal may be approaching a human merely for food, or affection, a person could easily conclude that the animal is rabid.

In Kentucky there have been cases of rabies in wildlife. This is a very good reason to leave young wildlife alone. If you pick up an animal that does have rabies, you could be infected from a bite or even a scratch.

There are still other problems in picking up wild creatures, according to A. H. Henson, director of law enforcement for the department.

First of all, a pet permit is required for holding any wildlife in captivity. This permit is available through the local conservation officer. Persons taking animals out of season (which is the case with picking up the alleged orphans) cannot be issued a permit. Therefore, confiscation of the animal and arrest for holding wildlife in captivity would be the only recourse for the conservation officer.

There are some cases where wildlife may be held in captivity legally, and either pet or propagation permit can be issued. However, the main concern of the department is for the animal. Therefore, strict regulations are imposed for the creature's well being. For more information, contact your local conservation officer.

The best course to take, according to both Bruna and Henson, is not to "love our wildlife to death." Whenever you find wildlife in the field, leave it alone. Its parents can, and will, take far better care of it than a foster parent.

YOU AND THE DRAFT
By Col. Taylor L. Davidson

The "draft" system is being phased into a standby status. This year will be the first since 1947 in which no "draft" calls are planned. However, we receive inquiries from students writing term papers to review the impact that Selective Service has had on American life.

Nationally, more than 17,700,000 men have been inducted into the armed forces during the 20th century. In World War I more than 5,800,000 were inducted. In World War II just over ten million men were called to arms.

During the Korean hostilities approximately 1,500,000 reported for service. Finally, during the Vietnam period from 1964 to 1972 over 1,800,000 men were involuntarily taken into the service; an additional 1,500,000 men were drafted during peacetime years.

In an eight year period from July 1, 1964, through July 1, 1972, approximately 6,800 were convicted of draft law violations, as contrasted with 1,800 men convicted in the preceding eight peacetime years.

Of the 6,800 convicted, 3,500 were given prison sentences, the rest probation and fines. Most of those convicted of draft law violations have completed their sentences, which in 1972 averaged 22 months, although 16 received the maximum sentence of five years.

At present, there are somewhat less than 6,000 young men under indictment for draft law violations. Of these, approximately 4,500 are so called "fugitives from justice," with 2,400 of the fugitives estimated to be in Canada or overseas.

In addition to those under indictment, there are approximately 6,000 more cases under investigation. These are cases in which Selective Service has determined that a violation of the law has occurred and has referred the case to the U. S. Attorney's office for investigation by the FBI and possible indictment and trial. An additional 2,500 cases are under review by the Selective Service for possible submission to the U.
