Rockcastle Recollections

© John Lair

Although no battles of any consequence took place in Rockcastle County during the Civil War, the lives of many of its inhabitants were touched by it. We hope eventually to secure a full roster of Rockcastle soldiers who fought in the war, and of either the North or the South, but in the meantime we will try to pick up as many stories as we can of happenings in the county involving citizens as well as soldiers.

It is more than likely that in every family living here during this tragic conflict there are accounts handed down on instances involving some member, or members, sometime or other during the war. In my own family, my grandfather and grandmother, John and Mary Lair, told many stories of the foraging raids of the soldiers of both sides. My grandmother always got a chuckle out of remembering a time when they had hidden all the chickens under the floor and she had just got through telling the raiders there were no chickens left on the place when an old rooster let out a lusty crow that started the soldiers tearing up the floor to get at them. My grandfather had a favorite riding mare stolen and when he followed the cavalry troop to Crab Orchard and invaded it, he was shot in the head and died. The mare was returned to him. Among other things he told of standing at the foot of a tall pine tree on Wildcat Mountain during the battle there, with a sharpshooter concealed in its branches, when a chain shot cut the tree trunk just above his head and cleared the top, with the sharpshooters still in, of down the mountainside. In the museum I have the highly-decorated sword given to him by Captain Peter James Hiatt, who had carried it throughout the war.

My grandfather Coffey had numerous narrow escapes from capture by the raiders, saved in one instance by the quick thinking of a daughter who locked a barn lot gate after he had dashed through on his horse, and while his pursuers were breaking it down he was able to get such a lead on them that they never caught him. An old-told tale in the family concerned the shooting of one of his sisters by a Union soldier. It seems that she was sent on the porch of their home sewing on a garment for her father when the soldiers surrounded the house. One of them came on the porch and demanded the garment. When he tried to take it by force, she put up such strong resistance that he became angry and shot her in the breast. As she fell she came in breaking a rain barrel at the end of the porch which had been turned bottom up and had a hatchet, or axe, lying on it. She caught up this weapon and threw it at him with such force that she imbedded it in a porch post just over his head. She was carried inside the house and propped up in bed and the commanding officer had the whole company pass before her. When she positively identified her assailant, the officer had him executed before a firing squad.

Women, as a rule, gave a good account of themselves in encounters with renegade soldiers who prowled the countryside whenever a group was encamped for a few days at one particular spot. I remember being shown a dark spot on the stepstone of the very old Purcell log house up Renfro Valley and being told that it was an old blood stain which they had never been able to remove. It was said to mark the spot where Elizabeth Hysinger shot a soldier who was trying to force an entry into her home.

Uncle Harrison Branaman, whose name appears on the rolls mentioned last week, had many amusing stories to tell of his experience as a soldier, beginning with the time when he was captured by a detachment of Union troops at the Old Green Hill School House. He was about eighteen at the time and, in company with some other young folks, was attending some sort of a school exhibition there when the soldiers came along and captured him. His big revolver, such as everybody carried at that time, was taken from him and he was started for headquarters at Mt. Vernon, under guard. Members of the guard drifted off into side roads along the way, searching for other civilians they might capture, until young Branaman was left in the sole custody of only one guard. At an opportune moment he pulled out a small deringer that he had missed in searching him and pointed it at his captor. He said that he meant to say to him "Unless I am allowed to escape one of us is bound to die." He said that he never got to finish his threat because as soon as the guard saw the pistol he started to run in one direction and he took off in another and they were soon out of sight of each other. The big Colt cap-and-ball revolver he carried through the war is now in possession of Herman Chasteen, being given to him by his father, Har., Chasteen, from whom I secured much of the information for this book before his death at an advanced age. Uncle Harrison had a brother, Henry Branaman, who was an officer in the Union Army. His weapons, I understand, have long been on exhibit in the Cincinnati Museum.

Another experience, with an appropriate souvenir to preserve its memory, happened to an ancestor of the Cox family. I have this story in some detail but do not have the notes at hand as I write this. It seems that several young girls were engaged in bringing water to a thirsty detachment of soldiers and otherwise administering to their comfort. A young officer was so touched by their kindness to the weary troops under his command that, having nothing else to contribute, he took off his sword and belt and handed it to one of the girls as a keepsake. He couldn't have entrusted it to better hands. The Cox family is still noted for the way it preserves such souvenirs, and in addition to the sword they have, among them, other noteworthy relics of other days. I know how they value them, having tried unsuccessfully to trade them out of them.

An instance of the death of a Rockcastle civilian at the hands of a Union uniform was the killing of W. B. Leaswell by Negro troops in 1865, at what was in my youth known as the Old Shaffer House, on the Old Mt. Vernon-Broadhead Road. The logs from the old barn belonging to the place are in the typical log cabin I built in Renfro Valley some years ago for the benefit of tourists. The old house itself is still standing and is among the oldest log houses still in liveable condition. Arthur Adams, who occupies it now, gave me some of the details of this murder some years ago. I will have to see him for further particulars.

Wally Phillips has some interesting stories to tell of his family during the war, as does Willis Johnson and many more older citizens. I will appreciate hearing from anyone who can relate an incident connected with the Civil War and will use in the finished history as many as I can find room for.

County Agent's Notes

By: H. Lee Durham

What To Do In July - June, the season reaches its full maturity in July and in the heat of the burning sun, the vegetation begins to lose some of the lush freshness and greenness of spring.

With proper care and cultivation, however, flowers and vegetables thrive. Green beans, cucumbers, tomatoes, and radishes begin to ripen. The air is filled with the hum of insects and animated by birds darting everywhere in search of food. Nasturtiums, dahlias, and poppies bloom; butterflies hover over wayside flowers; and over all is a sense of abundant life.

This month, despite the heat that may at times be oppressive, the lawn, garden, and flower bed must still be maintained. We must still mow, water, and weed. If sufficient rainfall is lacking, deep watering and high mowing will be necessary to keep a pretty lawn. In the vegetable garden, cultivation, although it helps conserve moisture in the soil, will not take the place of watering. Much cultivation and watering can be avoided by mulching which not only inhibits weed growth, but also keeps the soil cool and moist. Moisture is a great temperature regulator and much acts as a parasite and an insulating seal that admits air but, in turn, keeps out excess heat.

In doing garden work in July, it will be well to take some time out to reread garden bulletins studied earlier. This will refresh the memory on the types and best methods of using mulch and o-phow and when to irrigate. If you need other bulletins or special advice on garden problems, talk to your County Extension Agent.

Although by July many gardeners feel they have done enough planting for the season, late vegetable crops taste mighty good and come in handy. For those interested in late vegetables, sweet corn can be planted during the early day of the month. Silver Queen, a white variety, and Burpee's Honeycross, which is yellow, can be planted in early July and make excellent late roasting ears.

Bunch or bush beans can be planted up until mid-July, and beets, carrots, and turnips can be planted during the last days of the month. Hold off, though, on planting Bibb lettuce and kale until August.

Other things to do or think about in July - sow coriopsis seed, purchase flowering bulbs for fall planting, get after crab grass, and pick blackberries. Also, on the theory that it is better to live rich than die rich, a farmer or gardener can live richer and probably longer if, in July, he will take some time off from mulching, spraying, and watering to enjoy corn on the cob - eat cold watermelon - visit one or more of the U.K. Agricultural Experiment Stations - attend farm field days - go bluegill fishing in the farm pond - drink plenty of good cold lemonade - sit on the back porch at night and listen to the whip-poor-wills - and close for about 30 minutes at noontime each day in the hammock out under the maples.

All these things come highly recommended by medical, as well as agricultural science and, as statisticians say and prove by their figures, people who live on the farm and follow such procedures have a longer life expectancy than people of many other professions.

Landscape Notes - July is the month when all kinds of ornamental plants and flowers need to be watched carefully for evidence of insect and disease damage, lack of water, need of cultivation, and damage to the flowers, especially from wind or heavy rain.

Young trees, evergreens, and shrubs must not be permitted to suffer from lack of water. It will usually be much better for the plant if 3 to 6 gallons of water can be poured slowly around the trunk and allowed to soak slowly down into the soil, than to give the plant 1 gallon every day. Frequent applications of small amounts of water do not wet the soil down by the roots and tend to encourage the roots to grow toward the surface.

These young plants should be kept cultivated during the hot weather of summer. This cultivation should be to keep the soil loosened in a circle 24 to 30 inches in diameter around each plant. The soil in the circle should be worked to a depth of 3 or 4 inches. The outside edge of the circle should be built up 3 or 4 inches to form a basin to catch and hold the water from rain or from watering. Another advantage of this cultivation is that it destroys weeds and grasses that grow up around the stem of the plant. Home owners will often allow grass to grow up around the trunk of a young dogwood until the plant is literally choked to death. Grass and weeds remove moisture and plant food from the soil that are badly needed by the young plant. If this circle is maintained all summer, it makes an ideal area for the application of well-rotted manure or poultry droppings in December. A peck to a half bushel of manure kept away from the stem of the plant will supply fertilizer to help the young plant. Then next spring, this manure may be dug into the soil which is doubly good for the plant. If the manure is not available, one pound of high grade, complete commercial fertilizer may be applied in the spring. The answer to rapid growth for shade trees is to create favorable growing conditions for them, and the above method is one of the best. In fact, this cultivated area may be maintained until the diameter of the trunk of the tree is 6 to 8 inch-

Highway 461 To Be ReBuilt; City Will Be Bypassed

The Mt. Vernon-Somerset Road (Ky. 461), which has been the site of so many accidents, is going to be relocated and rebuilt.

Some fifty public officials and interested citizens from Rockcastle and Pulaski Counties gathered at the Mt. Pleasant Baptist Church last Thursday afternoon to discuss the proposed project with Bureau of Highway officials. There were no adverse comments concerning the plans; residents of both counties appeared strongly in favor of the new road.

handles an average of 1,900 cars each day, according to Garland. Bureau of Highway projections indicate that Ky. 461 will accommodate an average of 4,100 cars each day in 1968.

As the proposed road runs so close to Mt. Vernon, city and county officials from Rockcastle had the most questions and comments about the facility at the planning meeting.

Pulaski County Court Clerk Marshall Davenport apparently expressed the sentiments of most Pulaski Countyans when he pointed out that since the road runs through a rural section of Pulaski County and so vitally affects the City of Mt. Vernon, officials of the Rockcastle County city should exert the most influence in selecting the highway route to best serve their needs.

"We're 100 percent behind any road that gets us to 175.... Davenport continued, "When we have a line (corridor) you like...we're 100 percent behind you."

Charles B. Parsons, superintendent of the Rockcastle County School System, wanted the highway designed so it would best facilitate traffic in the vicinity of Rockcastle County High School. In addition, James Robinson, Bob Jasper and Virgil Alcorn, all members of the Mt. Vernon City Council, were present to view the proposed alternate routes for the new highway in an effort to determine the corridor which would be of the greatest benefit to the city.

Officials of the Cumberland Valley Area Development District asked Bureau of Highway officials to locate the road in the area of Mt. Vernon so prospective industrial sites will be served.

The final public hearing is a "design hearing," at which time individual property owners can be told how their properties will be affected by the construction.

Right of way acquisition and eventual construction of the facility are the concluding steps. Bureau of Highway officials pointed out.

Hilton emphasized that all information obtained at Thursday's hearing will be utilized in determining the corridor which the Bureau of Highways eventually will recommend.

Hilton summarized the attitude of the public strongly feels the need for the proposed road. He and Roy Laughlin, project planning engineer, Division of Planning, for the Bureau of Highways, both said that the planning meeting at the small country church near the Rockcastle-Pulaski County line was the most successful since this type of session was initiated in February.

Even if most of the persons present had been opposed to the highway construction project, we still would have considered the meeting a success. Hilton noted, pointing out that the early planning session is designed to determine public opinion.

However, no one at the meeting expressed any opposition. They all apparently want the new road.

Corridors selected by highway engineers generally are areas of approximately 1,000 feet in width through which road construction would be feasible, however, Mr. Hilton emphasized that no cost estimates have been prepared at this stage and there is no way to tell individual property owners how they will be affected by the new road.

The proposed Ky. 461 relocation project begins at the end of the present construction of the new connector link with Ky. 80 some six miles East of Somerset and extends in a southerly direction to the Reno Valley Interchange on I-75 near Mt. Vernon.

Although there is a slight variance in each of the five proposed corridors, the average distance of the relocated highway is 16.5 miles. It is 18.1 miles between the same two points on the existing Ky. 461.

The new highway will have a 24-foot surface - two 12-foot driving lanes - plus a passing lane on hills. It will have 12-foot shoulders with 18 feet on either side in the ditchline area.

Hilton also said the relocated road will be a high-speed (60 mph maximum) highway with a minimum sight distance of 450 feet at any given point. It will have a partially controlled access, meaning that the road will be fenced with access points at most state and county roads and city streets.

Generally, partially controlled access means a minimum spacing of 1,600 feet between points in rural areas and a minimum of 500 feet in urban areas, according to the highway engineer.

Present plans call for the new Ky. 461 to serve as a bypass around Mt. Vernon. Hilton said that whether this bypass will be two lanes or four lanes will depend on traffic projections in the area.

The existing Ky. 461 has an 18-foot driving surface and

Judge Carter "Querries" Supt. on $3,000 Check

County Judge Charles Carter, in Tuesday's Fiscal Court Meeting, openly accused County Schools Superintendent Charles B. Parsons of using school funds during the May Primary Election.

The charge was hurled during discussion by the court on the school's general budget and requested tax levy of 98¢ per $100 of assessment. Judge Carter questioned the poll tax included in the budget, which accounts for an estimated $4900 of the school's revenue each year. He said that since the county had taken the poll tax off twelve years ago that he felt the school should follow suit and delete the tax from their budget. Superintendent Parsons defended the tax by saying that it had always been included in the budget and that the revenue from the tax was estimated at $4,900. At this point, Judge Carter made the statement that, "I don't feel the school's need the extra money from the poll tax if they can cash a check for $3,000 on the day before election day and get it in $1 bills."

Mr. Parsons answered the charge with the explanation that he had not even known of the check being cashed until a few days ago when it was brought to his attention by someone else and that he (Mr. Parsons) had immediately called Clayton Sayler, principal of the Rockcastle County High School for an explanation. Mr. Parsons explained that the check was cashied by Bige Towery, assistant principal of the Court to buy back textbooks from the students and that cash was used to facilitate the transactions on the last day of school. He said that records of the transactions were available and that he would make available a copy of the school's audit report when it was completed.

However, Judge Carter told Mr. Parsons that he would have to have someone else's word for the transaction and would certainly appreciate seeing a copy of the audit.

The clinics will be held from 6 to 8 p.m., and the fee will be $1.50 per animal.

Dairy Day 1973

Hayden Timmons, Manager, Public Relations and Public Affairs for KRECC, is shown interviewing Miss Nancy Coffey, Dairy Princess Candidate. Miss Coffey was later crowned 1973 Rockcastle County Dairy Princess by Sherry Ezell, Kentucky Dairy Princess.

Ernest Masters, 75, of Radcliff (formerly of Brodhead), passed away Friday, June 29 at Elizabethtown. A native of Corbin, Mr. Masters was born June 12, 1898, the son of the late Wilson and Christine Qualls Masters. He was a retired Civil Service Employee and a member of the Disciples of Christ Church at Radcliff.

WINNER IN THE FLOAT CONTEST was Northside Baptist Mission whose float was built by their RA organization. The theme of the float was "Milk Equals Sound Body - Church Equals Sound Mind."

CYCLIST KILLED ON HIGHWAY 461

John L. Conrad, 24, of Goshen, Indiana was found dead about 7:30 A.M. last Friday morning by a passing motorist on Highway 461 near Lane's One Stop Restaurant.

Mr. Conrad, who was reportedly on his way to Somerset to visit a friend, was found lying beside the road in a deep ditchline with his motorcycle some yards beyond him, also lying in the ditch. He is the second traffic fatality in the county this year.

Coroner Bill Dowell attributed death to a broken neck and internal injuries and said the accident probably occurred about 1:30 A.M. Friday morning.

The body was shipped to Scottsdale, Pennsylvania for burial.

Frankfort Watchline

It doesn't take a mind reader to learn that public education will make a determined effort in the next legislature to obtain as much as higher education has in the past decade or so.

The spokesmen for secondary and elementary schools feel—and we think rightly so—that it's time for the administration and General Assembly to focus on the first through 12th grades.

The trouble has been—and probably still is—that the education lobby seems in the public view more concerned about selfish aspects such as teacher pay increases, teacher retirement funding and free teacher group insurance than about Johnny who must somehow learn to read better.

Oh, every school advocate will shout to the skies that what really matters is the children. We've heard that so many times in everything from school board meetings to Kentucky Education Association conventions that it's become ritual.

All right, school folks, we believe you. But we also think you want to make sure you get your economic slice of the benefit pie professionally. Nothing wrong there, probably, but it takes the gloss off the idealism expressed by school people.

However, there's one unselfish trend in public education that we must point out, both in fairness to the school lobby and because it might in the final analysis spawn more controversy than any other single factor.

Without doubt, a move is afoot to make the wealthier of Kentucky's 190 public school districts bear the burden of equalizing educational opportunity for the poorer districts. You'll see it more and more as a 100-member citizens' committee meets statewide and continues to gather grassroots opinions with the help of high-powered consultants. You'll hear or read about it often these days as legislative groups meet to find out what the school lobby wants for 1974.

It's heartening to know, at least on the level of the state Education Department, that the goal—aside from the usual cry for more pay and fringes—is a true educational opportunity for all.

We're not talking about minorities. They get it already, at least theoretically through desegregation. We're talking about the boy whose district cannot afford to provide classes and instruction for him to compete academically with his urban counterpart.

If this sounds like something the U. S. Supreme Court has disposed of recently, you're right. The high court said the property tax, criticized as the villain of unequal opportunity, is valid enough for school financing.

But, instead of throwing in the towel at that point, some educational leaders are going ahead with what will turn out to be proposals to switch money to needy districts. The formula is not simple. In fact, many lawmakers don't know what Education Department folks are talking about specifically in terms of Minimum Foundation aid from the state.

Assuredly, however, two plans are in the mill: One to make local districts raise more of their own school money and thereby free money the state has been shelling out. The other to have the state bolster aid to the poorer districts. It isn't simply that the state will siphon funds from the wealthy to the needy districts. An attempt will be made to give the poor districts more from funds which do not exist.

Ah! There's the rub. How much? Will the state pay? Is public education's day really at hand at last?

In the midst of all the spicery, more interesting and sensational news out of the Capitol City, don't forget the importance and the potential of this topic. *****

On The Way Up—Both Parks Commissioner Ewart Johnson and Eastern Kentucky University President Robert Martin are large men.

Apparently, they've been teasing each other on the issue of size for many years. We'll let you decide who won this latest battle of wits and waist before a crowd recently at Fort Boonesborough State Park.

Johnson: "Bob Hope came to Lexington one time and when Bob Martin greeted him at the airport, Hope thought the whole Eastern student body had come out to see him."

Martin: "I'll have you know I've lost 28 pounds in recent weeks. How much have you lost, Johnson? That's okay, Ewart, since I'm going down, I expect to be passing you soon on your way up. Then I expect that before long, when folks see you coming they'll think it's the entire Kentucky Parks system."

The reception was held immediately following the ceremony in the Fireside Room adjacent to the chapel. The bride's table was covered with a lace cloth and a candelabra with pink sweetheart roses and white streamers. (Cont. to 9)

News and Views From Your Rockcastle Library

By Alleyne Davis
Don't forget STORY HOUR each Saturday afternoon during July, from 2:00-3:00. Films will be shown and stories read to the children.

When I suggested to a library patron recently that he take a book home for his young son who is not quite two years old, he couldn't seem to make up his mind as to whether I was teasing or just didn't know what I am talking about. A two year old is not too young for books. In fact, he is ready to begin a thrilling friendship with a collection of rhymes that has been adding to the happiness of childhood so many years that the origin is shadowed in mystery. I refer, of course, to Mother Goose.

New England children will tell you that Mother Goose was a real person and they can take you to the grave of Dame Goose in the Old Burying Ground in Boston to prove it. It is probably a shock to them to learn that in 1897 in France Charles Perrault published a book that was called Contes De Ma Mere L'Oye (Tales of Mother Goose). The verses that make up our Mother Goose books today have come from many countries and many times but each year they bring fun and pleasure to a new crop of children so that the verses themselves are ever new. As Mother Goose says: "No, no, my melodies will never die. While nurses sing, or babies cry."

Even babies respond to "Hush-a-bye Baby," "Pat-a-cake" and "This little pig" and from two to five years of age, children should be encouraged to say the verses over and over until they are theirs forever. Children who know the Mother Goose rhymes enter first grade with much better speech habit and a greater power and feeling for words than the children who have never known Mother Goose.

These and other picture books are at the library for the very young child and all parents are invited to bring their small fry in to get acquainted with them.

The Cost of Meats and Meat Alternates—The meat, poultry, and fish items in meals usually cost the most. But the range in costs of different types and cuts of meats is great, so careful selection may result in worthwhile savings. The best buys among selected items at the meat counter in February, 1973 were hamburger, beef liver, chicken, turkey and some kinds of fish. Most expensive were loin steaks and chops of beef, pork, lamb, and veal. Estimated costs of 3-ounce servings of cooked lean from selected types and cuts of meat and poultry and of fish are shown in Table 1. The amount actually served might be more or less than three ounces, of course, depending on personal preference or the size of pieces, such as chicken parts, chops, or steaks.

In addition to replacing expensive types and cuts of meat, poultry and fish with cheaper ones, the economy-minded shopper can replace some of the meats she would ordinarily use with alternates such as eggs, dry beans and peas, and peanut butter. These foods are suitable replacements for meat because they provide protein and other nutrients for which meat, poultry, and fish are valued. Cheese can also be used. It can be counted on for most of the nutrients found in meat, except iron. Cheese, however, is a good source of calcium and meat is not. One way to determine good buys among meats and meat alternates is to compare the costs of amounts of them that provide equal protein. Table 2 shows the cost in February of amounts of a number of meats and alternates required to give 20 grams of protein—one-third of the recommended allowance for a day for a 20-year old man.

A 3-ounce serving of cooked lean meat from beef, pork, lamb, veal, turkey, or fish provides 20 grams of protein or more. However, well over a serving of some meats and meat products are required: 10 slices of bacon, 3-1/2 frankfurters, or six 1-ounce slices of bologna, for example.

Dry beans, peanut butter and canned bean soup were the best buys in protein of the alternates priced in February (Table 2). Eggs and American process cheese were also among the best buys. Amounts of these foods needed to provide 20 grams of protein are also larger than the usual serving—more than a cup of cooked or canned dry beans, a can of bean soup, 4-1/2 tablespoons of peanut butter, 2 ounces of American process cheese, or three eggs. Because the protein of vegetable origin—such as dry beans and peanuts—does not rate as high as the protein from animal sources, it is a good idea to have a little meat, egg or milk at meals with these foods.

Food Clogs—The key to successful baking is to use exact measurement of ingredients—use the right tool and the right method.

If you're measuring liquids—use a measuring cup with space above the one-cup line to be more accurate and avoid spills. You might also set the cup on a flat surface to check the measure at eye level. A little bit too much—or too little—can make a big difference.

Dry yeast may be stored for several months in a dry, cool place. But compressed yeast is perishable and should be stored in the refrigerator and used within a week, according to USDA.

There aren't many storage times recommended to assure high quality in baked goods held in a freezer at 0°F. Three months for white bread and plain rolls, and eight months for unbaked apple, berry, cherry, and pea pies.

Brown sugar imparts its own distinctive flavor in cooking—it helps to moisten food, too. Does the depth of your pan make a difference in baking. You can believe it does. Use the appropriate size and number of pans when baking.

If you reduce a recipe—to serve four people instead of eight—your cooking time may be different, too. A larger amount of food may take longer to cook; a smaller amount may be overcooked if not watched and removed when it is done.

Only a few foods contain much iron—liver is a particularly good source. Lean meats, heart, kidney, shellfish, dry beans, dry peas, dark-green vegetables, dried fruit, egg yolk, and molasses also count as good sources.

Potatoes are not more fattening than other foods. Remember—a boiled, pressure-cooked or baked medium-sized potato provides only about one hundred calories. Would you like to compare that to an apple or banana?

Did you know that Americans eat about sixty pounds of fresh potatoes each year?

Like fried potatoes? There may be two to four times as high in calories as a plain baked potato.

Find a rock in your potato bag? Return the rock to your grocer and he will give you the rock's weight in real potatoes. They sometimes look so much like a potato that they get into the bag occasionally because most harvesting and packing is done today by machine.

Crisp crunchy carrot sticks are a natural for picnics or snacks. Carrots are in good supply now, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Choose the smaller carrots for eating raw.

Yes, potatoes wrapped in foil tend to bake in a shorter time than unwrapped potatoes because metal, especially a dull finish, absorbs heat faster and holds it better than the potato skin. (Many restaurants bake potatoes in foil for this reason.)

The tight foil wrapping holds in steam, resulting in a softer skin, but also may cause the potato to be heavy and soggy, if left in the foil too long.

To be Really Cool this Summer, Be Sure to Buy the Right Equipment

When you decide to "go electric" for clean, healthful central air conditioning, be sure to install the right equipment. Your Rural Electric friends can help you.

- THE UNIT SIZE is important. You get the full advantage of electric cooling only if the equipment is right for your home. (Think about electric heating, too.)
  - OUTDOOR TEMPERATURES in your area must be considered. If the equipment's cooling capacity is too great, dehumidification may not be satisfactory.
  - GOOD INSULATION is a must for satisfactory operation of electric comfort—cooling or heating.
- Contact your Rural Electric system for insulation tips and other money saving, electric saving ideas. Electricity is too good to waste.

The electric way is clean.
