Your birthday, Dad, has come again

The day we loved so well.

But you're not with us today

Our love for you to tell.

No presents now; just flowers,

Dad.

To be loved your grave.

But we know God had a plan for you. He called you home on high.

He called you from a land of care

As you said "Come home, my child."

Your work down here is over now.

With this you shall always abide

Sometimes it's hard to understand

We loved and miss you so

But we must never question

God.

Why you had to go.

The Lord speaks a time for us

And this applies to each and all.

Perhaps before tomorrow comes

We'll hear the master's call.

"Rockcastle Women"

The figures for Rockcastle County show that 31 percent of the jobs in the local area are now held by women.

In looking at the ratio of employed and job-seeking males and females of different age groups, the finding is that women between 25 and 54 have had the sharpest growth in the labor force and that men over 55 have had the biggest decrease.

Dr. Stanley Hammons has assumed the duties of acting commissioner of Health Services, replacing Dr. Dale Farabee. Hammons has been deputy commissioner of the Health Services Bureau since February.

Few Understand The PVA's Role

By: Charles Williams

One of the most widely misinterpreted elected offices in Kentucky is that of the Property Valuation Administrator (PVA). According to E. D. Ballard, director, Property and Inheritance Tax Div., Dept. of Revenue, "The general public doesn't realize the importance and responsibility of the PVA and that he is a state and not a county official."

His responsibility includes locating and valuing all property in his county. His job requires accuracy and good judgment, in order for every individual to pay the proper amount of taxes. The PVA does not fix tax rates as many believe, he simply determines the value of the individual property. The local fiscal courts and school boards fix their tax rates, which are applied to the PVA's evaluations.

The road to becoming a PVA is quite different from that of any other elected official.

Before being eligible to be placed on the ballot one must pass a test administered by the Department of Revenue.

Ballard described the test as very comprehensive. The exam is in four parts, general aptitude, ad valorem tax laws and real estate evaluation (one is afforded 45 minutes to prepare for this section), arithmetic problems and an oral section.

There is no educational requirement to take the test, and Ballard pointed out that persons with an 8th grade education have passed the test, although many persons with much better educational backgrounds have failed it. Once elected, the PVA receives training in property evaluation from the Dept. of Revenue.

Individuals must list all property they owned on January 1 with the county PVA by March 1. Any property not listed by that date must be located and assessed by the PVA. After assessing all property the PVA compiles an alphabetical list of property evaluations in each tax district of his county. The results are

SIGNIFICANT DATES IN KENTUCKY'S PAST

(Compiled by the Kentucky Historical Society, Colburne Connelley, President)

August 6, 1855—This election day in Louisville is remembered as "Bloody Monday," because of the riot, including fighting, bloodshed and houseburning, that took place in that river city. The riot was caused by a conflict between the Know-Nothings (called that because of their attempts to ignore the slavery issue), the Whigs, and the Democrats. The Know-Nothings claimed that the greatest danger to the country was the Roman Catholic Church and foreigners.

August 7, 1777—The first marriage took place in Kentucky territory took place on this day when Samuel Henderson wed Elizabeth Calloway, Squire Boone officiating.

August 8, 1785—Delegates were chosen for the third of a series of conventions, which assembled at Danville for the purpose of planning the separation of Kentucky from Virginia. Although no definite plan was made and no serious problems were solved, the third convention definitely expressed Kentucky's desire for immediate relief from the problems facing the newly settled areas, mainly the inability of Virginia to protect her far western regions from the threat of Indian attack.

August 10, 1792—The first post office west of the Alleghenies was established at Danville, with Thomas Barbee postmaster.

August 11, 1767—The Kentucky Gazette was established at Lexington on this date with John Bradford as editor.

August 12, 1864—On this day the men of the Kentucky 17th Volunteers welcomed their men sent to the Department of Revenue where the evaluations are compared to the total sales prices. Should the PVA's list not coincide with the sales prices, the PVA has erred and will be required to review his assessments.

Until 1918 the office carried the title of tax assessor and an assessor could not succeed himself. The office of assessor was abolished and replaced with the county tax commissioner, who could succeed himself and who was subject to the test.

In 1969 the name was changed to PVA because the title of county tax commissioner implied that he was a county official responsible for levying taxes, which was misleading to the public.

Methods of assessing local property vary in different states. Since 1965 Kentucky has assessed property for its full value.

The PVA is only responsible for assessing property for the county and state but many cities use the PVA's records to determine how much city taxes an individual should pay.

The 120 local tax assessors in Kentucky are under the supervision of the Department of Revenue. Some states have been known to have as many as 3,000 local assessors who are elected or appointed as local officials with no central supervision. Hawaii, on the other hand, has no local assessors.

The PVA's salary is determined by a classification system similar to the state merit system. The salary range starts at $6,300 a year, with a potential $24,000. Ballard says that less than one PVA in the smaller counties are paid the minimum rate. Conversely few will earn the maximum figure.

The PVA also appoints deputies who must take the exam and be approved by the Department of Revenue.

FORD ANNOUNCES GRANT TO 8-COUNTY CIVIC

Gov. Wheeler E. Ford has announced a grant for $22,000 in federal funds to cover operational costs of the eight-county Combined Valley Regional Health, Welfare, Bell, Clay, Jackson, Knox, and Rockcastle Counties.

According to a crime commission report, the grant money will pay council staff salaries and compensation, travel expenses borne by staff and council members, plus additional operating costs.

BUILDING OF THE KY. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION - June 1958

CASE 5586 Allowed the White Plains Water District a rate adjustment and permitted the district to construct certain improvements and maintenance.

CASE 5587 Held that an electric power line constructed by the Louisville utility commission was not an invasion of the Cumberland Valley Rural Electric Cooperative. Circuit Court of the state granted the proposed appeal.

CASE 5588 Granted permission to the West Kentucky Rural Electric Cooperative Corporation to acquire the necessary property to construct an ash pond adjacent to its Dale Power Station at Ford.

Real Estate Profession Draws More Applicants

By: Charles R. Sizemore

Want to become a real estate agent? So do many other people, according to George Cave, chairman of the Kentucky Real Estate Commission who says that interest in the real estate profession has increased 77 percent in the last five years. To become a real estate agent, one must first make application to the Real Estate Commission and pass a written examination. The applicant then is issued a license to be a real estate salesman. One may serve as a salesman for two years, or with sixty hours of college credit in any subject, for one year, in order to become a real estate broker.

Cave said that the primary difference between a salesman and a broker is that a broker can hire salesmen to work for him.

Nat Sanders, education counselor for the commission said a major contributing factor for the increased interest in the real estate profession is an expanded education program in real estate courses at many Kentucky colleges and universities.

Sanders said that currently eighteen Kentucky colleges and universities offer real estate courses for credit, and five or six offer two year associate degrees in real estate.

Almost 2,000 students were enrolled the associate degree program in the fall of 1973 and spring of 1974, Sanders said. Sanders said the real estate education programs are funded through the Real Estate Education, Research and Recovery Fund which is designed to protect the public from readers who conduct improper, fraudulent or dishonest deals. For example, if a licensed real estate salesman or broker receives money in a real estate deal as a result of misrepresentation, false promises or any other type of unlawful action, and then skips town with this money, the aggrieved person could collect up to $10,000 from the fund as a settlement. Sanders added that, by law, the Commission is required to keep the level of the recovery fund at or above $200,000. This is done through regular bonding fees that each real estate salesman and broker must pay annually.

Any money in excess of the $200,000 level may be used for promoting real estate educational programs at various schools, developing real estate libraries, providing scholarship funds, covering expenses required by instructors of real estate courses, and generally anything that would promote the real estate field, Sanders said.

He pointed with pride to the research center for real estate at the University of Kentucky.

Sanders said that various problems concerning the real estate business are studied at the center.

The increased interest placed upon educating the real estate agent by the commission will instill an attitude of professionalism in agents, Sanders said, and make them more aware of the needs of their clients.

Down On The Farm

By: Roy Brown, Vice President
Cumberland Production
Credit Association

We are visiting today on the farm of Mr. and Mrs. John Houston near Brodhead. John operates a 540 acre farm. Their livestock consists of about one hundred twenty head of beef cattle. Their crops are: corn - 45 acres, barley - 20 acres, oats - 25 acres, wheat - 50 acres, and pepper - 4 acres, with plenty of hay and pasture.

The day I visited on his farm, John was combining wheat and unloading it from combine to the truck. He expected his wheat to yield about forty-five bushels per acre.

They have a good farm and John does an excellent job operating it to its highest productivity and also does an excellent job of conserving soil. John manages to find time for community activities. He serves on the Soil Conservation Board of Supervisors. He is also a member of the Cumberland Production Credit Association Advisory Council. Both John and his wife are exceptional people, doing a good job "Down on the Farm."

More Rockcastle County Women Are Employed

Rockcastle County women have been entering the labor force in recent years in ever-increasing number.

The current figures indicate that some 24.3 percent of the local female population over the age of 16 are now employed outside the home or seasonally for such employment.

In actual number, according to the latest official tabulation by the Department of Commerce, 1,020 local women out of a total of 4,200 of working age are in the labor force.

They are filling a wide variety of jobs - in retail stores, in offices, in factories, in the teaching and health professions and in service industries. Almost no field of endeavor is closed to them anymore.

The 24.3 percent of the local female population that is in the labor force is larger than was reported in 1960, when it was 18.8 percent.

Of the local male population, by way of comparison, approximately 59.0 percent of those over 16 are in the labor force.

The facts and figures are from the Department of Commerce, the Conference Board and the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Nationally, they find, women have made big strides in the last 25 years or so in the labor field. Federal restrictions on sex discrimination in employment and legislation requiring equal pay for equal work have been a boon for them.

The extent of the change is indicated by the figures. In 1947, they show, women constituted only 27 percent of the labor force. This included all persons who had jobs or were looking for them. As of last year, however, the proportion had jumped to 38 percent.

Male participation in the labor force, however, has been going down. Among those over 16 it dropped from 74 percent to 63 percent since 1947.

Two Men Jailed After Western Auto is Robbed

Two suspects are being held for questioning in connection with an early Wednesday morning break-in at the Western Auto Store in Mt. Vernon, in which over $3,000 worth of guns, about $100 in cash and several small tools were taken.

According to Sheriff Manuel Shepherd, City Patrolman Roy "Schooner" Lucas was patrolling along Richmond Street when he noticed a car pulling out from behind City Hall in a suspicious manner. Lucas decided to pull the car over and question the occupants, but, when he attempted to do so, the car took off at a high rate of speed north on U.S. 25. Patrolman Lucas gave chase and radioed Deputy Jailer

Raymond "Pill" Baker, asking that he call for help. The suspect car wrecked on U.S. 25 near the home of Herbert Coffey and the occupants of the car fled the scene on foot.

Arriving at the scene, Sheriff Manuel Shepherd, State Trooper Danny Coleman and Mr. Baker aided Patrolman Lucas in apprehending the suspects, one on Green Fish Hill and the other on Interstate-75. Entry to the store was gained by forcing a rear steel door, according to Esull Hodges, owner.

Frankfort Watchline

It could be that deliberations by the Court of Appeals over who's going to finish out the November Senate runoff will make all else about the race anticlimactic — including who wins.

That's the way the campaign, now in a premature infancy, is impressing us from this Capitol City vantage point. We know that the annual picnic and hoohah down at Fency Farm early next month is supposed to kick off the big election campaigns in this state where tradition is supposed to influence politics and just about everything else. But not so for Wendell Ford and Marlow Cook.

They've been off and running for many, many weeks now. But the trouble is that to them, though both top-drawer campaigners, can seem to pick up speed. They remind us of a couple of youngsters in a pot-smoking race, tripping and stumbling over themselves and each other. It's almost as if they are just not making time. But the state's high court decides just what kind of campaign it's going to be — or whether there will even be a campaign. Hearings on whether or not Senator Cook will have a place on the November ballot begin here

August 5th. You'll recall the senator was a couple of days late in designating a campaign treasurer and Secretary of State. Thelma Stovall called his hand, claiming he shouldn't be in the primary. But Franklin Circuit Judge Henry Meigs said Cook was okay. Mrs. Stovall appealed and there we are.

But, back to the way this campaign is shaping up. It's almost as if Ford thinks Cook is supposed to be forced to sit this one out. And on the other side of the fence, you'd think at times that Cook thinks so, too.

Let's look at a few of the many campaign blunders to which we've been referring. We'll start with the Red River Gorge controversy, heading up not on the other side of the fence, you'd think at times that Cook thinks so, too. Let's look at a few of the many campaign blunders to which we've been referring. We'll start with the Red River Gorge controversy, heading up not on the other side of the fence, you'd think at times that Cook thinks so, too. Citing flood control concerns and the need for a new source of C&E money, the state has had a number of environmentalist criticism down on his hands. The decision was hardly calculated to appeal to voters. Ford was apparently used in to the infatuation, the voters couldn't care less about ecology this year. He knows better now, especially with the tricky Cumberland Falls State Park chairlift mess also on his conscience. Couple that with a trio of red-bone-rattling deals by his administration for relatives of key Democrats, mix in some controversial space-leasing arrangements and here we are. Northern Kentucky, season all that with some mind-changing over whether or not President Nixon and you've got quite a political stew on your hands.

You'll recall that Senator Cook's last night at the President should consider resigning. Ford said that was nothing new — "it's what we've been saying all along."

But Ford goes to Washington and suddenly we're hearing him say that the president should not leave office but that the impeachment process should be allowed to run its course. Oh, well.

Now Cook. First, as we reminded you, he forgot to sign in properly. Then something moved him to put the resignation thing to the great dead. Now, there may not be as many Republicans as Democrats in this state, but it doesn't matter who you are. You'd better not say something like that to their president.

There's little doubt among Republican leaders in Kentucky that Cook's suggestion to Richard Nixon was something better left unsaid... that it hurt him seriously among Republicans.

Then, the other day, on the eve of the announcement of the 1974-75 coal gasification project in Western Kentucky, the Senator poo-pooed the whole deal, selling it to the great dead. He gambled because the Federal Government has not yet guaranteed its share of the cost.

But Cook must accept the fact that Ford is going to get good publicity from time to time, just because he's the governor. Cook gets a lot of it, just because he's Senator. And to blast something that appears to bear merit might tend to lower a candidate in the voters' view.

Finally this observation: though one not close at all, the voter popularity between the two men appears to be evening up — but for a rather negative set of reasons.

Looking forward to a Cook-Ford faceoff at Fency Farm on August 3rd, possibly the only time they'll have the chance before November to glare at one another, eye to eye.

OOOPS — Frankfort's Dr. Myron Lord isn't backing down from his insistence that something be done about violations of the state's legislative lobbying law.

Something's being done all right. The grand jury here is looking into the list of fifty-two alleged violators. Would you believe it? Dr. Lord's name's on the list.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Sir:
This past weekend I visited in Rockcastle County; and while I was there, I picked up the Mt. Vernon Signal. There was a letter I read from Mrs. Orna Hamblin to the editor. In closing, Mrs. Hamblin states she did not mean to offend anyone.

So, to begin with, let me say as a Rockcastle County Saddle Club member, I am not offended. I realize many of our group do have little anger around the springs, caves, etc.
Our club is like any other club — they won't all abide by the rules and there will always be a few who will litter.

Apparently, Mrs. Hamblin hasn't been in Rockcastle County very long or she would know lots of other people camp around the caves and not just the Saddle Club.
In the past year there have been groups from other counties and other states camping, people who have nothing to do with the Saddle Club whatsoever.

This is the part I don't understand — Why put all the blame on the Saddle Club? As for gathering up all the garbage and taking it to the Saddle Club President, why, that would be like gathering up the sins of the people and taking them to the preacher.

Why should he take the blame for something someone else does?
30 YEARS AGO JULY 20, 1944: Mrs. Clayton Ponder received a telegram stating that her husband Marine Pvt. Clayton Ponder was wounded in Saipan.

Mrs. Jesse Cummins received a letter from her husband Pvt. Jesse Cummins stating that he was wounded in action in France.
The Wife-Savers Club held their regular meeting Tuesday night at Rendlo Lodge. The men acted as hosts with a Fish Fry. Two couples, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Bryant and Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Behrens, were enrolled as new members.
The Homemakers Club met with Mrs. C. C. Cox July 14. New officers for the year are: Mrs. Clyde Linville, president; Mrs. Ethel Griffin, vice presi-

Mrs. Hamblin states she is not the only one complaining about the Saddle Club. This may be true, but why have we not heard from them before? The Saddle Club meets once a month in the Courthouse in Mt. Vernon. Why have these people not met with the Club and complained to them?
I was born and raised on Crooked Creek and have known the people on the Creek, around Poplar Gap and Dry Fork all my life. I grew up to know and love them and most of all, to respect them. One of the things I remember most about them is their friendliness and many times as we ride by, they welcome us. We are often invited to stop for water or to rest and talk with them.

Most of these people are my people and I've yet to hear them say anything against the Saddle Club.
Yes, we will take our part of the blame for the littering at the springs and caves, etc. But not all the blame because many times we've found messes at these places left by other people before us.

NEWS AND VIEWS FROM THE ROCKCASTLE CO. LIBRARY

Parents often complain about the bothersome curiosity of children, their eternal questions, and the scrapes they get into trying to find answers. But this need to investigate, find out, to know for sure is a healthy sign of normal or better than normal intelligence. In fact, the keener the child is mentally, the wider and more persistent his curiosities will be. The need to know surely and accurately is a basic hunger and one which books help to satisfy.

Books about Alaska, desert Indians, birds, plants, stones, stars, and wild animals, care of pets, do-it-yourself books, and, of course, dictionaries and encyclopedias properly gauged to a child's needs. If your child is not familiar with the Library, take him in today and show him the children's section.

Some of the new children's books received at the Rockcastle County Library include:

Amphibians as Pets, by George and Lisbeth Zappler. A readable, scientifically accurate book about amphibians and their place in the world of pets.

The Bad Bell of San Salvador, by Patricia Beatty. A historic tale of Old California and the raging conflict between the settling Mexicans and the Comanches. Grades 6-8.

A Cow for Jaya, by Eria Grant. Jaya's family buys a new cow but she isn't quite what he expected. Grades 1-4.

Dakota Sons, by Audree Distad. Friendship and its responsibilities is the theme of this warm story. Grades 4-6.

De Bears Have Mothers, Too? by Aileen Fisher. A delightful look at animal families and their problems. Pre-2.

Let's Look At Reptiles, by Harriet E. Huntington. A science-picture book about reptiles and their place in the animal world. 4-6.

For the first time a Kentuckian may prove the validity of his will during his lifetime according to a law that just went into effect.

This measure allows the testator, one writing a will, and the witnesses to appear before the County Court Clerk or a Notary Public for Certification of the will.

According to Commissioner Howard Salles, Department of Banking and Securities, "this allows a will to be probated without the presence of the witnesses... it is very beneficial, especially if the witnesses die before the testator."

In the past, witnesses were required to testify while the will was being probated. If the witnesses were unavailable, a person knowing the testator was required to verify the testator's signature.

In all other respects a self-proved will is treated as any other. Any will written before the new law remains valid.

Another change by the recent General Assembly is that if a deceased person leaves no will, any person with a claim on his Estate must file that claim within one year instead of three.

With the coming of the railroads, it appeared at one time as if coal mining might become one of Rockcastle County's principal industries. A mine of much promise was put into operation at Pine Hill, by Cash Crooks and others, and the coal shipped from there was declared to be the equal in quality of any mined in the far-famed coal fields of Pennsylvania. During the life of operations there Pine Hill was the largest town in the county, with four steam sawmills and two large coal mines to support it.

At about the same time, Livingston was coming into its own as a mining center, with several mines of various sizes opening up, among which was the Sambrook operation. Before coal mining became a thing of the past in that area, coal was being hauled into the railroad loading bins by electric trolleys and carried across Rockcastle River by swinging bridges.

Smaller mines were opened in the Cove section and several carloads were shipped out of there daily. Later on, there was considerable action around Johnetta and a spur track was laid up Brush Creek to bring the coal onto the mainline at Orlando station. In the meantime, and even before, small wagon mines were in operation and coal was being hauled out by wagon and team in many parts of the country. Some of these survived even after the bigger mines became exhausted or were closed, for one reason or another.

Now, here of late, there threatens to be a revival of the interest in coal. The overwhelming demand and the consequent high prices have many coal companies giving a second look to this direction.

Where, in earlier times, not much attention was paid to a vein of coal that did not run to a considerable thickness, they are now scrambling for the twenty-five inch coal that was once the province of the humble wagon mine operator. Land leasers are abroad in the land and it is understood that several big operators are ready to move in as leases are acquired.

But coal mining was not the only early business in this county that ran its course and is now a thing of the past. In the Mt. Vernon Signal for June 28, 1912, Editor James Maret carried an account of a business which was then important to the economy of the county but is now long defunct. He wrote of two building stone quarries then in operation: one at Hummel, near the Langford Post Office, and the other at Wildie. The quarry at Hummel was opened by the Kentucky Freestone Co., Inc., in 1900, with John Sperry as President and George, William, Frank and Ellis Hummel as officers and stockholders. D. L. Carter was superintendent.

The freestone quarry was in three different layers, represented by three different colors. The surface layer, to a certain depth, was a light buff color, somewhat inferior to the two deeper layers. The next layer under that was of an olive tint, while the third and deeper layer shaded into blue. This layer was hardest to get at, on account of the depth at which it was found, but was of far superior quality as building stone. Sometimes as many as 50 kegs of powder would be necessary for a single blast. Powder, being found superior for the work, was used instead of dynamite.

All this freestone was of exceeding fine texture, and while it could not be cut and handled like limestone, lent itself readily to sawing and all blocks, of many different sizes, were sawed at the quarry before being loaded for shipment. In some cases, where the machinery in operation at the quarry was not big enough for the job, it was prepared in huge blocks and shipped to Cincinnati, where the necessary machinery was available. The huge blocks still to be seen along the side of the road between the farms of Bill Stewart and Doc Wolf, in the edge of Wildie, were some of these blocks which were quarried for shipment but never loaded out. They are still there, largely because they would be extremely hard to load and haul out by truck, now that the spur track on which they were originally supposed to be handled has long since been removed.

Both the Hummel and the Wildie operations were carried on by local men, many of whom held their jobs for the entire life of the business. Ane Dooley, Britt Durham, Frank Adams, Bill Shearer and Lewis McGuire were powder men, each having a different job to perform. Shearer was also official blacksmith. Lee Carter, J. J. Adams and C. W. Coffey ran the hoisting engines and J. W. Anglin operated the dummy engine in the yards. Rans Anglin was steamdrill man. J. M. Turpin was mill foreman, and Gaines Carter was bookkeeper and commissary clerk.

When in operation, the process of "sawing" the stone was of unusual interest to the public and there were always sightseers around to satisfy their curiosity. Actually, it was a wearing, rather than a sawing process, with long metal bands drawn across the surface of the stone, edgewise, with water constantly dripping in the cut to keep down friction heat and facilitate the work. These metal strips, when discarded for new ones, were gathered up by farmers who cut them to proper lengths and wired them to the side of a doublehoe plow to keep clods from covering young corn when being cultivated. On one or two occasions, especially toward the end of operations, the machinery was vandalized by local thugs and considerable damage done, as well as much valuable material being stolen.

The quarries were run on sort of a seasonal basis. Work was begun around the latter part of March of each year and closed down around December first, as the stone deteriorated if taken from the ground and exposed to cold weather. At the peak of operations, in 1908, the Hummel plant was shipping four hundred carloads of stone per year, most of it going to Cincinnati for the building trade in that area. Several car loads of sawed stone was absorbed by the local trade, being used in homes and commercial buildings in Mt. Vernon, Berea and other nearby markets. Probably the best local example of such use is the Rockcastle Hotel building, in Mt. Vernon. Many of the brick buildings erected here and elsewhere were trimmed with freestone from one or the other of the Rockcastle quarries, the largest at the time in Eastern Kentucky.

The Wildie quarry, established in 1906, was owned by Kentucky Rockcastle Stone Company, of which Archibald Colter of Cincinnati, Ohio, was president and Mose McNew was manager and foreman of the quarry. Alex Manus, blacksmith, and a crew of sixteen men were all natives of the county.

Both quarries and sawmills have long been abandoned and completely dismantled. It is doubtful that either will ever be rebuilt and activated, although there seems to still be a considerable quantity of freestone in the county. Modern building practices tend toward a different kind of structure than the more substantial which made liberal use of stone of this kind.

The Mt. Vernon Signal in one of its issues of 1912 carried the promise of a new business proposed for Rockcastle County which was intended to be of help to the economy, but which, for some reason, never got underway. The editor wrote at length of plans and prospects which involved the building of a huge flour mill, the development of which was to bring a new village into existence and add a new post office to the county system.

Dr. Cornelius, of Berea, and L. H. Davis, financier, of Livingston, were the men behind the promotion and it seems they had spent considerable money in having plans drawn and engineering specifications laid out for the mill. It was to be built across Roundstone Creek, just above the point where it goes partly underground, at Sinks, Kentucky, at the telegraph office standing where the L&N and C.V. Railroads form a juncture. This was calculated to back up the waters of Roundstone for a distance of three and one half miles, impounding a body of water sufficient to furnish water power to operate a huge roller mill. Everything was to be of the biggest and best and most modern type and the mill was planned to be one of the biggest in the country, located adjacent to two railway systems that would bring in grain and send out flour all over the nation. The post office established, and the village to grow up around it, was to be named Cornelius, a combination of the names of its two promoters, Cornelius and Davis. Since both were good, practical business men, amply financed, we are unable to conjecture at this last day just why they did not go ahead with their project. Had they done so, no doubt Cornelius, Kentucky, would have been a reality and Rockcastle would have benefited greatly thereby.

Other early ventures local in nature have been tried and failed, showing that at least our people possessed originality and daring. Among the first of these was the attempt to establish a salt works on Horse Lick Creek, somewhere south of Double Lick. A later business which flourished for awhile but eventually played out, was the tobacco factory established by the Martin family at Brodhead, Ky. They turned out a good product, under some of the catchiest and best trade names I have ever heard and with proper backing and advertising, could have gone to the top in their business. Some day I hope to get the complete story on the Martin tobacco venture and present it in this column, as well as in the book which is soon to follow.

Land Surveying - In response to George R. Best of the Kentucky Bureau of Highways, the Attorney General's office says there is no conflict between the two Kentucky statutes that prohibit the practice of land surveying without a license. An exception to these statutes is a law which provides that any employe of the state working under the direct supervision and control of a qualified and registered civil engineer or land surveyor may practice.

Local Girls Participate In Kentucky 4-H Fashion Revue

"Fashion Harmony" - blending sewing and modeling skills, poise and clothing selection knowhow - was featured July 17 when the 1974 Kentucky 4-H Fashion Revue was held at the University of Kentucky in Lexington.

Representing Rockcastle County in this state event, which was planned around the "Fashion Harmony" theme were Lori Stewart and Alicia Dick both of Mt. Vernon. Some 150 senior 4-H'ers (ages 14-19) took part in this state event, which was planned around the "Fashion Harmony" theme. All had won top honors in county 4-H Fashion Revue.

Lori and Alicia, accompanied by Cindy Stephens, Summer Extension Intern, arrived in Lexington Monday afternoon, July 15, for a three-day program featuring sessions on fashion, modeling and merchandising as well as the Fashion Revue competition. Special programs also were planned for the adults who went with the girls to Lexington.

The program for the 4-H'ers began Monday night with entertainment by the present Miss Lexington, June Wallace, who also talked to them about poise, grooming, and personal development. Meanwhile, the adults heard fashion stylist Meta Hodge discuss "What's New in Home Sewing." Mr. Hodge is with Simplicity Pattern Co., national sponsor of awards in the 4-H Fashion Revue program. A get-acquainted party for both 4-H'ers and adults was held that night.

The girls and the garments they have made were judged Tuesday morning, with each girl modeling her outfit in one of the six Fashion Revue categories - play clothes, mix-match ensemble, advanced dress, tailored garment, formal, and knitted garment. Included for the first time this year, the "knitted" category was for garments which combine hand-knitting and a fabric, corresponding with a new advanced unit in the 4-H knitting project.

A session on modeling was held for both Fashion Revue participants and adults on Tuesday afternoon, with Ms. Hodge discussing the topic "Graceful You."

Another highlight of the three days was visits to Lexington's Fayette Mall and Turland Mall on Tuesday night. Several Mall stores presented programs on clothing merchandising and the 4-H'ers modeled their award-winning outfits in special fashion shows in the center of each Mall.

On Wednesday morning, the 4-H'ers rehearsed for the state 4-H Fashion Revue, while the adults attended a session that includes talks on 4-H leadership, 4-H clothing projects, pants for women and sweater knits. Speakers at this session were Vera Dawson, Woodford County 4-H leader; Madge Bush, UK Extension 4-H program specialist; Jo Ann Schickel and Bette Jo Dedie, UK Extension Clothing Specialist and Lois Serkland, home economist with the Viking Company.

The final - and most important - part of the three-day program, the 4-H Fashion Revue, was held that afternoon. Fashion Revue participants were judged somewhat differently from regular 4-H exhibits, according to Flora Foster, Washington Co. 4-H leader, and Lou Darland, Marion County Extension Agent for Home Economics, who had charge of the state event. Cheryl Witt, County Extension Agent for Home Economics in Rockcastle County assisted in the event as a member of the State Fashion Revue Committee. Clothing exhibits, where only the garments made by the 4-H'ers were entered, were judged mainly on construction. In Fashion Revue judging, the girl received more attention than the garment, although garment construction was still considered.

Given major emphasis in selecting Fashion Revue winners were such points as: Was the 4-H'er poised and well-groomed? Did she have good posture and a pleasant attitude? Did the outfit she make fit well and was it becoming to her? Was the garment's color, fabric, texture, line, and design suitable to the 4-H'er and to the occasions on which she intended to wear it? How well did she select her accessories?

Out of a possible one hundred points, the judges' scorecards allocated forty points to the 4-H'er herself, forty points to the outfit as it looked on the fit, and twenty points to garment construction.

Tobacco Samples To Be Taken At Warehouses For Pesticide Analysis

Chemical analysis of random samples of tobacco at warehouses will be made throughout the marketing period to determine if any pesticide containing DDT or TDE was used on the tobacco after it was field planted, according to Harold Ballinger, farm program official in Rockcastle County.

He reminded growers that it is a violation of law to certify falsely that they did not use DDT or TDE on their tobacco after it was planted in the field. Before being issued tobacco marketing cards, producers must certify whether or not DDT or TDE was used. Tobacco marketing cards - issued by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service county office - are required for all tobacco grown under marketing quotas.

During the past four years practically all producers have certified non-use of materials containing DDT or TDE. Nevertheless in some areas chemical analyses have shown residual levels of pesticides.

Since tobacco is mixed in the redrying and packing process, use of DDT or TDE by only a few producers can affect the entire area. ASCS County Executive Harold Ballinger said finding DDT or TDE residue could result in loss of important markets for an entire area. Several major buyers have indicated concern about the level of DDT or TDE residue in their purchases from certain areas, according to notices Mr. Ballinger has received from ASCS headquarters at the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Washington.

"It is very much to the benefit of interest of every tobacco grower in Rockcastle County to be sure that correct certification was made about use of DDT or TDE and to see DDT residue is marketed under false pretenses," Mr. Ballinger said. He expressed hope that the chemical analyses of tobacco samples from local warehouses would show no residue from the pesticides. *****

Going Out Of Business Sale -
"Going Out of Business Sale," "Bankruptcy Sale," or "Closing Out Sale" are very attractive eye-catchers indicating that a consumer might save many extra dollars.

While there are many legitimate sales, a sale that seems "too good to be true" often is not true.

In Kentucky, several measures have been taken to protect the consumer from false, misleading, or deceptive "going out of business" sales. Any business conducting such a sale must obtain a license from the clerk of the county court where the business is located. A business may not make any abnormal purchase of goods within sixty days of an application for a license, and no goods may be added to the inventory during the sale.

If a person is considering a purchase from a "going out of business sale," he should check the following items which are required by law:

- Did the advertisement for the sale state the number of the license and the final date of the sale?
- Was a duplicate copy of the license attached to the front door of the premises where the sale was conducted?
- Was a copy of the application for a license posted in a conspicuous place in the sales room?
- Did the application contain a listing of all inventory included in the sale?
- If any of these requirements are not met, the sale may be in violation of Kentucky law, and the consumer should contact the Attorney General's office.

For additional information regarding these or other consumer protection laws, Kentucky residents may write the Attorney General's Office, Consumer Protection Division, Room 34, Capitol Building, Frankfort, Ky. 40601, or call on the toll-free consumer hotline at 800/372-2960.

Refrigerator Doors - Leave them shut as much as possible. Don't make repeated trips to remove items one-by-one when planning your meals. Also, make sure door gaskets have a good seal. They'll become brittle and lose their effectiveness with age. To save more energy, turn off the refrigerator when you go on vacation. Just clean the unit, insert an open box of baking soda and pop open the door. *****

Ornamentals
Prune climbing roses. If the plant is older and well established, remove one to two older canes at ground level. As new canes acquire size, attach to a trellis or other support.

Remove flowers from annual bedding plants after they have started to deteriorate. This results in more vigorous plants that bloom longer and more profusely.

Divide and replant Oriental poppies just as new growth starts from the root. This usually occurs in late July. Transplanting should be done only to relocate plants in more permanent places.

Divide Bearded Iris now. Cut out borer infested parts and treat cuts with sulfur. Mound soil when planting to provide good drainage and to help discourage rot organisms.

Re-pot houseplants and place outdoors in protected areas to encourage vigorous growth for the winter months. Sink the pots in soil to prevent drying out.

Grass clippings make excellent mulch if applied in small amounts. More than one inch used at any one time will result in heating and a rotting odor.

Water plants during droughty times. Peonies,

Dogwoods, Azaleas and many other plants form buds during the summer months for next year's flowering and fruiting.

Order fall bulbs now while the selection is still good.

Cows With Milk Fever Should Be Treated By Vet

Milk fever is a disease which is most likely to occur in mature cows five years of age or older, in cows which are heavy milk producers, and in cows which have just given birth.

That information comes from Bill Wise, Extension Veterinarian at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. Wise says if a cow is suffering from milk fever, you will usually find her lying down and unable to get up. Her head may be turned around to her side, her eyes will be dull, her nose dry, and she will not eat. If you find her lying on her side, you should raise her to a normal reclining position and block her up with bales of hay if necessary. If she remains on her side, there is a danger that she will bloat and die.

You should call a veterinarian immediately when you find a cow stricken with milk fever, says Wise. You will need to provide the veterinarian with a history of illness - the kind of cow, her age, how long she has been sick, when she last gave birth to a calf, whether or not she is trying to calve, and any abnormalities you may have noticed.

Sometimes a cow cannot give birth because of the paralyzing effects of the disease, according to Wise. Cows have been known to break a leg while falling down because of milk fever. The cow may have two or three similar deficiency conditions at the same time, or she may have fever with a complication such as mastitis.

Scientists do not know the cause of milk fever. Wise points out, however, they do know that during the course of the disease, the cow's blood calcium level is below normal. The blood calcium is low because of sudden letdown if milk following the act of calving. Milk is high in calcium and heavy milk producers require heavy supplies of calcium. The cow's body is not able to resupply the heavy calcium drain brought on by the sudden letdown of milk.

Milk fever may occur before calving, during calving, shortly after calving or several weeks following calving. Measures which have been tried for preventing the disease include providing cows with low-calcium diets before calving, putting large amounts of Vitamin D in the diet, and many others - all with limited success, according to Wise.

However, there is a useful treatment for milk fever. The treatment is directed toward replacement of the calcium of the blood. The veterinarian puts a measured dose of calcium salts into the vein of the cow. After the treatment, the cow is usually able to get up and go about her normal everyday life, says Wise.

Beef Heifers -

Don't let replacement heifers for your beef cow herd get too fat. That's the advice of extension beef cattle specialists at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. They say evidence indicates that heifer calves which become flashy even at weaning, are poorer producers than those with less condition.

Don't creep feed the heifer replacement, say the UK specialists. You may need to separate the cows with heifer calves from those with steer or bull calves. Some farmers use rotational grazing, with the heifer group grazing behind the steer or bull group. All this does not mean that weaning weights should not be used in selecting heifers, the UK specialists point out.

Beef Stew - Convenient And Delicious -

According to a rough estimate of the US Dept. of Agriculture (USDA), 25 percent of a carcass of beef will be ground beef and stewing meat. Most of us know how to use ground beef, but making beef stew is another matter. And knowing how is important at the moment because right now is a good time to buy. AMS says beef output is expected to be up from last year while retail prices have been dropping since February.

Beef stew is one of the best meals for serving convenience. It contains meat, vegetables and potatoes, all in one serving.

To make beef stew for six:

- 1/4 cup unsifted flour
- 1/4 tsp. salt
- 1/8 tsp. pepper
- 1 1/2 lbs. boneless stew beef, cut into 1" cubes
- 2 lbs. fat or olive oil
- 3/4 cups water
- 3 medium slices onions
- 4 medium potatoes, cut into 1" cubes
- 5 medium carrots, quartered
- 1/4 cups fresh or frozen peas

Combine flour, salt and pepper and coat meat with mixture. Brown meat thoroughly in moderately hot fat in large fry pan or deep pot. Sprinkle remaining flour mixture over browned meat. Add water and cover tightly. Simmer two to three hours, or until meat is tender. Add onions, potatoes and carrots, cover and simmer fifteen minutes. Add peas and simmer again until vegetables are tender. Stir occasionally.

Here are some additional tips: When browning meat cubes, don't crowd the pan. If the pan is small, brown only a part at a time. Also, don't let the mixture boil as this can cause undesirable changes in the meat texture. You can omit browning the meat if desired. Thicken with a flour paste made with cold water after vegetables are tender.

This is the basic recipe for beef stew, but it can be varied according to your taste. You might want to try other vegetables like lima beans, celery and green peppers in the mix. Another variation is to include two bay leaves and six cloves while cooking. Just remember to remove them before serving.

What If The USDA Grade Shield Is Missing From The Beef

Getting your money's worth is important - especially when buying meat. But unless you shop with an eagle-eye for quality as well as price you risk making an unsatisfactory purchase. If you're not quality-conscious, you may end up with beef that is either lower than the quality you wanted or not worth the price you paid.

In fact, even a US Dept. of Agriculture (USDA) meat grader would have trouble evaluating the quality of a single retail beef cut. He makes his evaluations by checking only whole carcasses or large wholesale cuts because the important quality grade factors cannot be evaluated in smaller cuts or retail cuts. Once he has determined the grade, he rolls the distinctive USDA grade shield all along the carcass.

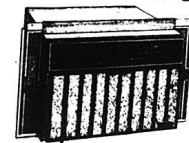

Although about 80 percent of all beef sold at retail is federally graded, the consumer may come upon beef that is not graded. Since grading is a voluntary USDA service, packers are not required to have their meat graded. If you come upon beef that doesn't bear the distinctive USDA grade shield, what should that mean to you?

Basically, it means that you are on your own when buying ungraded beef. You cannot benefit from the USDA grader's impartial and highly skilled judgment on quality grades. Furthermore, you are not assured of getting consistent (Cont. on 10) quality over a period of time.

When buying beef, look for the USDA grade shield, it's your assurance of quality. You can rely on it to mean the same wherever and whenever you see it.

USDA quality grades for beef are your guides to its tenderness, juiciness and flavor. These factors vary so widely in beef that it would be impossible for consumers to determine the differences without USDA grades.

Described below are the characteristics of the same cut in each of the top three USDA grades of beef:

USDA Prime: Offers the ultimate in tenderness, juiciness and flavor. It has abundant marbling -- flecks of fat within the lean -- which enhances flavor and juiciness. It is the highest grade available and is most often sold to hotels and restaurants.

USDA Choice: Is very tender, juicy and flavorful. It has slightly less marbling than prime but is still of very high quality. It is the grade most often found in retail stores.

USDA Good: Is only slightly less tender than Choice, but because it has less marbling, it lacks some of the juiciness and flavor of the higher grades. Beef bearing the USDA Good grade shield is only occasionally found in retail stores, but it often pleases thrifty shoppers because it is usually sold at lower prices and is slightly more lean than prime or choice.

Kentucky Afield
By Hope Carleton
Dept. of Fish and Wildlife

The most sought after game animal in Kentucky is the squirrel. During the 1972-73 hunting season, 115,000 went after the bushytails and they brought home 1,725,000 of them.

In this large group of squirrel hunters there are, unfortunately, more unsuccessful hunters, in relation to harvest, than there are successful ones. The difference lies not so much in marksmanship ability as it does in the ability to find squirrels. The successful hunter must know where and how to hunt the squirrels at a given time of year.

For instance, during the earliest part of the season many mast trees don't have ripened fruits which help to concentrate squirrels. Food is abundant and squirrels may be found feeding almost everywhere, but they're hard to find because of the lack of concentration and heavy foliage.

Many hunters are disappointed with the fruits of their effort during this time and give up, leaving the later, "easier" hunting, when the mast trees are ripe and the leaves have fallen to the "pros" who (then) harvest limits almost every trip out.

This need not happen to early-season hunters, though, if they'll pick up on a few "tricks" that have been proved through the years to be effective in both early and late season hunting.

First, wear soft-soled shoes and clothing that makes a minimum of noise when rubbed against brush. Do this even in August. Then, walk very slowly and stop often to listen for noises of squirrels feeding and/or moving about. You'll almost always hear a squirrel (if you listen) before you see it.

During dry periods, and if a small stream is a sure way of getting close to squirrels as they move and feed along the streambank in easy shooting distance.

Later in the season, the rifle hunter can have a hey-day by locating himself in a wooded area while squirrels are concentrated. Often a hunter can take a limit from a single stand if he's chosen his area carefully.

The kind of gun to use? Well, that's largely a matter of individual preference. Some hunters like a scattergun while others choose a rifle with iron or even telescopic sights. Those who prefer .22 caliber rifles, regardless of their choice of sights, generally have them zeroed in at fifty yards.

Those who use a shotgun with a modified or full choke tube will be satisfied with either No. 6 or No. 8 shot in a high brassull.

There are three seasons this year for hunting squirrels and the first opens August 17 and continues through December 6. The season then will be closed for 5 days and reopened December 12 to continue through December 31.

The daily limit is six and there's a possession limit of twelve after two or more days of hunting. The possession limit, however, may not be held while in the field.

The important thing to remember is this: learn the squirrels' habits so you can find them in the early part of the season as well as the last; walk softly, listen carefully, and try to get in some target practice before you go.

Another thing - if you can't use a limit, don't take them. Save some for the next time or the next fellow.
