Kentucky Afield

By John Wilson, Guest Writer

Two of the hottest artificial lures showing up on the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources fishing report these days are spinner baits and crank baits.

THE MT. VERNON SIGNAL, P-12
THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1976

These types of lures are fairly new, and many fishermen may not be familiar with them. So let's take a fishing trip on paper with these baits.

First, we'll tie on a spinner bait. Unlike the older and more familiar spinner, which has blade, body and hook on a single straight shaft, you'll notice that the spinner bait has a "safety pin" configuration with a lead head and single hook resembling a jog on one arm of the "pin" and a spinner blade (or sometimes two) on the other arm.

Tie the line to the loop where the two arms meet, and you're ready to go. No, you don't need a swivel, because this style of spinner won't twist your line. Now cast the retraction right into the middle of that clump of partially submerged weeds.

No, you won't get hung up. You see, the hook, as on a jig, rides upright and the top arm (the one with the spinner blade) acts as an effective weed guard. This makes the spinner bait an excellent choice for fishing in shoreline cover areas or through submerged trestles.

Now reel the lure back toward the boat with a moderately fast retrieve. And don't worry about that log just under the surface, just pull the spinner blade over it, and then let it drop straight down on the other side for a couple of feet. If there's a bass under the log, he'll take it on the way down, so stay alert.

See-you missed him. A bass can take and reject a lure in a matter of less than a second, so set the hook as soon as you feel anything, or if you see you line twitch.

If the bass are feeding near the surface, keep the spinner bait near the top of the water, so it makes a visible wake. Or if the bass are deeper, let the lure sink to the desired depth before beginning your retrieve. Keep trying various depths and speeds until you hit on the right combination.

In summer, when the bass are in deep water, you can dish the spinner bait on the bottom, much as you would a plastic worm—with a pull-and-pause retrieve. But most of the time, a steady pace is best.

Okay, now let's switch to crank baits. You'll notice that these look much like traditional plugs, with a fish-shaped wood or plastic body and two or more sets of treble hooks.

Many of the newer crank baits have a distinctive profile—fat bellied and humped—and contain built-in rattles which make a sound that seems to attract bass. There are older designs that are fished in the same way, but it's been only within the last couple of years that these lures, and the term "crank bait," have become popular.

Since these lures aren't weedless, you'll have to be more careful where you cast. A very productive technique with these lures (and with spinner baits, too) is to cast parallel to the shoreline and retrieve the bait along, instead of out from, the bank.

That cast was okay—about five feet out from the shore. Now you'll see why they're called crank baits—just crank it in steadily at a fairly rapid rate. Although the plug floats while at rest, you notice that it dives the depth depending on the lure design and the speed at which it's cranked when you start the retrieve.

These lures have their own built-in action, so all the fisherman has to do is cast and crank. In the water, a crank bait resembles a small bait fish trying to get somewhere else in a hurry, an actively which (we hope) of mister bass will take exception to.

Usually, crank baits are used when the bass are in less than six feet of water and are feeding actively. During very hot or very cold weather, the fish move into deeper water, where a slow, bottom-bouncing lure, such as the artificial nightcrawler or dolly is the choice of many experienced anglers.

Crank baits and spinner baits are usually most productive in the spring or fall, when surface temperatures are within the bass' comfort range. That means that they are catching fish now, and will continue to do so until the summer heat forces the bass into deeper water. But even in July and August, spinner baits can be effective lures for night fishing.

I'm going back to the dock now, so you're on your own. As you gain more experience with these lures, you'll pick up some of the more refined techniques yourself. "A important thing is to use a lure enough to become familiar with it and to have confidence in it.

So just keep fishing, and I'll see you when you come in with your limit."

County Agent's Notes

BY H. LEE DURHAM
COUNTY EXTENSION AGENT
FOR AGRICULTURE

FACE FLIES

Face flies and horn flies will soon be making their annual appearance on cattle. Most people like to try and control these pests using self-application devices such as dust bags or backrubbers.

Dust bags are best used in forced-use situations. This would be the time to build fences around watering tanks or ponds so that the cattle have to walk through one or two narrow openings to get to water. By handing a flat dust bag across each opening now you'll have the insecticide dust waiting for the horn flies and face flies when they first appear. Another advantage to getting dust bags up now is that it gives the cattle a chance to get used to them and to get used to using them.

If you can't fence off water or salt, put a dust bag across the front of the mineral feeders. This type set up will give some face fly control. If you favor butt bags hang them now as well. Be sure to locate them in loafing areas where the cattle rest. Setting them up now will allow the cattle to become acquainted with the bags and get used to using them. Use one but bag for every 25 to 30 animals.

Backrubbers should be put out now as well. These devices give good horn fly control but are not that effective for face fly control. Check the backrubbers you used last year. If they are worn, build new ones. You County Agent for Agriculture has a publication called ENT 4 MAKING AND USING A CATTLE BACKRUBBER, which shows you exactly how to build and set up backrubbers.

HOME GARDENERS

The control of insects and diseases of vegetable crops depends on the following practices:

Choose the correct materials. The materials needed to control most garden insects are Sevin, malathion, and methoxychlor. To control diseases, use one or more of the following: maneb, zineb, captan, or one of the coppers. The materials for disease control are sold under many different trade names, so look for the "active ingredients" on the package.

Select a good sprayer or duster. A good sprayer or duster usually costs a little more, but it saves time and does a better job. Buying cheap equipment is usually false economy.

Keep equipment in good operating condition. Careful cleaning and preparation of equipment following each spraying or dusting will do much to lengthen its usefulness and increase its efficiency.

Start at the right time. Start control for insects and diseases as soon as the plant breaks through the soil, and repeat as needed. Some vegetable crops may even be destroyed while seeds are germinating. Most early vegetable crops are attacked by flea beetles or aphids. Protect them with malathion or methoxychlor.

Thoroughness of application. Thorough dusting or spraying covers the entire portion of the plant above the ground. Give careful attention to placing materials on stems and undersides of leaves, since some insects never feed on the top side.

Frequency of application. Maintaining a cover of chemicals on a plant from the time it emerges to the time it is harvested requires an application of chemicals every 7 to 10 days. During rainy seasons, this might not be often enough.

Repeated dusting or spraying is necessary. A growing vegetable plant is developing new leaves, new fruit or both. Therefore, each time dusting or spraying is done, leaves or fruit will be covered that were not present at the previous spraying or dusting. As long as you see evidence of insects or diseases, spraying or dusting should continue.

Insecticide Restriction. Some insecticides leave a residue for several days. These should not be applied just before harvest. Always read the insecticide label on the package to find out how many days you should wait before you eat the vegetable. Some insecticides have a short waiting period.

Vegetables may be eaten in 1 to 3 days after they are applied. For specific information on pest control, contact your County Extension Agent.

CENTIPEDES

House centipedes do not damage food supplies or household furnishings and do not have a poisonous bite. However, the presence of these pests is annoying and may be unnecessarily frightening.

Habits: Most centipedes normally live outdoors. In some areas, however one species of long-legged centipede thrives indoors, where it feeds on soft-bodied insects and spiders.

How to control centipedes: kill these pests, use a household surface spray containing lindane. Apply the spray directly on the pests. Sweep them up with a broom and dustpan.

"FUNERAL SERVICES"

satisfied, both with their funeral directors and the services they offer.

Most respondents indicated that they selected their funeral director on the basis of the firm's reputation and secondarily because of personal acquaintance; and thirdly, because of convenience. Hardly anybody selected a funeral director because of his prices or advertising, according to the study.

Officers of the National Funeral Directors Association declared that this study is one confirmation that the funeral industry is neither commercial nor profit-making. It is a service industry, and it is a service industry that is extremely important.

The survey further reported that most people do not favor increased government regulation of funeral practices. And by the overwhelming margin of 10 to 1, respondents preferred state and local regulation of funeral practices rather than that of the federal government.

In this regard NFDA has maintained that complaints against funeral directors and funeral practices are not widespread and those relatively few that do exist can best be handled at the local and state levels where the non-specific has maximum convenient response.

The survey report is based on a nationwide total of 1,005 personal interviews with adults who have made arrangements for a funeral service within the past ten years. All interviews were conducted by WATS line telephone from Central Survey's general office in Shreveport, Louisiana, under centralized control and supervision. A nationwide cross section sample of residential telephone numbers was provided by the Marketing Information Center of the Houston II. Hummel Corporation.

The National Funeral Directors Association stated that it commissioned the survey to find out what the American public really thinks about funeral directors and the services they offer. And the best way to accomplish that was by query those who had arranged funerals in recent years, NFDA asserted.

It is NFDA's belief that funeral practices should reflect the actual needs, wants and desires of the American public, and not what certain governmental officials arbitrarily determine the public should have.

City Council To Decide On Compromise Proposals For Lake

At the regular monthly meeting of the Mt. Vernon City Council Monday night, the Council decided to study three compromise proposals which would govern the use of Lake Linville this summer and decide on them later this month during a called meeting.

Councilman Chester Hellard told the Council that he had been approached several times concerning the compromise proposals and went on to present them to the Council. They are:

(1) To restrict the lake from use of gasoline engines except for the period from June 10th until Labor Day each year, a proposal which would allow bass to spawn in the lake Mr. Hellard said.

(2) To abide by the state policy and restrict the use of engines larger than 5 h. p. and

(3) To put markers across Hysinger Hollow and not allow gasoline engines up there at any time. Mr. Hellard said this was a major spawning area on the lake and this restriction would keep spawning from being ruined. Mr. Hellard also reported that the Fish and Game Department said there was practically no spawning in the lake last year.

The Council decided not to take action at this time on any of these proposals but to wait and decide the lake's future at a called meeting later this month.

Councilman Hellard also suggested that after the temperature of the lake raises, a quality test of the water should be run and a similar test be run after boats have used the lake quite a bit this summer.

Action on this proposal will also be considered at the called meeting.

The subject of 14 dead cattle in or near Lake Linville was also brought up at the meeting and local Sanitarian Tony Hopkins was contacted to see what disposition had been made of the cattle.

Mr. Hopkins reported, via telephone, that the two dead cattle nearest the lake had been burned and that the others were either being buried, burned or removed from the site.

A request by Assistant Police Chief John Grider for a pay increase was also discussed by the Council. Mr. Grider, who was present at the meeting, told the Council that his position called for extra responsibility, such as seeing to the maintenance of the police cruiser, and that he felt that he should have more money than the other patrolman who were not burdened with extra responsibility but who drew the same pay.

A discussion of the city's financial position was then held and Mayor Roland Mullins informed the Council that the City would end this fiscal year, June 30th, in the black. It was decided to raise Mr. Grider's salary from $475 a month to $500.

The Council also voted to hire City Policeman Donnie Doan permanently.

Mayor Roland Mullins also told the Council that the city's efforts at obtaining a loan and grant to expand the water and sewer system was apparently dead as HUD had approved only 21 proposals throughout the state, of which Mt. Vernon's was not one. However, Mayor Mullins did say that the project of widening West Main Street out to the high school had not been defeated but that the Highway Department was in the process of recording a new traffic count for the area and developing cost estimates and official word on this project would not be received until a later date.

Also on hand for the meeting was Richard W. Moore and David A. Dries representing the firm which is preparing the city's 201 Facilities Survey. Mr. Moore presented a report to the council of the progress of the report to date and outlined steps to be taken to complete the survey. The city has received grant approval for the government's share in the cost of the survey.

In other action, the Council, on a motion by Virgil Alcorn, voted unanimously to require property owners outside the city limits to dig their own ditches for water lines and to lay their own water lines. Then, before the lines are accepted by the city for maintenance, the construction is to be inspected by Water Department Superintendent Matt Powell. Under the motion, the property owners will also be required to pay for inspection of the water line during construction by a city water department employee.

Selling the former city dump was also discussed by the Council and it was decided to sell the dump at public auction around the first of June. Local realtors will be contacted and asked to submit a proposal for selling the site. It looks as though strangers to our city will finally be able to know what street they are on. The Council voted to purchase enough street signs from the Kentucky Correctional Industries to take care of each street within the city limits.

The cost of the project, $1,494.90 will be paid from Federal Revenue Sharing funds.

$1.5 Million In Checks Mailed For 1972 Burley

Checks totaling $1,538,396.89 are in the mail this week to growers, representing their net profits on tobacco from the 1972 crop assigned to the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association (BTGCA).

Some of the checks will reach every county in the five state burley belt of Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia and Missouri, the area in which BTGCA administers the burley price-support program.

Approximately 29,500 checks are being placed in the mails on Friday, April 16, alexington, Ky. Only those growers who placed a part of their 1972-crop under loan to the Burley Co-op will receive payments.

The distribution represents for growers a net gain of 10 1/4 cents on each dollar they received in advances at the time of sale in the 1972-73 marketing season, said Alvin R. Beckley, executive secretary-treasurer of the association.

The payment to growers marks the final step by BTGCA in the process of handling that portion of the 1972 crop which went under price supports, and all overhead expenses.

In a report accompanying the checks, members of the executive and sales committee of the association reviewed the co-op's price support operations since 1941, noting that "for 86 crops this association has provided price protection to burley farmers in the market place," during which period it has received under loan of its members more than 1 1/2 billion pounds, advanced $856,679,000-46 farmers and carried on both domestic and foreign programs promoting the use of American grown burley. The program has been "an unmatched success," the statement continued, and added: "As a member of this association, you can safely call the work, and brag about the results."

The statement and report were signed by David J. Williams, president; Joe McDaniel, vice president; A.R. Beckley, executive secretary-treasurer; E. Logan Brown and W.B. Blackford, directors. *****

New Kindergarten Units Authorized For 1976-77

The state Department of Education has informally allocated the 150 new state-financed kindergarten units authorized for the 1976-77 school year.

Don Bale, who heads the department's bureau of instruction, said the units will be officially allocated to school districts as formal notification of available certified teachers is received. The bureau has thus far received certification notices for 27 prospective kindergarten teachers, Bale said.

Requests by local school districts for the units exceeded the supply, he said, noting that the department received requests for 229 units for the next school year.

The $4.3 million legislative appropriation which will fund the 150 units for the upcoming school year provides

GROCERY OFF FOOD STAMP PROGRAM FOR 3 YEARS

Ella Robinson Store, of Mt. Vernon, Kentucky has been removed from the food stamp program for three years because it violated the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) laws.

The store, which is owned by Mrs. Ella Robinson was disqualified for three years, starting March 25. It had been charged with redeeming food coupons that had been accepted in violation of the food stamp regulations.

James M. Sanders, in charge of the Lexington field office of the Food and Nutrition Service, explained that the store will not be allowed to accept food coupons during the three-year disqualification period.

Sanders said that food stamps, by law, can be used only to buy food. The only exceptions, he said, are garden seed and plants to be used to produce food.

SORRY, ALL GONE—The new $2 bill went on sale yesterday in banks across the country and the Bank of Mt. Mrs. Mary Ponder, Head Teller, displays the bill in the above photo which carries Thomas Jefferson's picture on the front. The bill was released to coincide with President Jefferson's birthday, April 13th. The reverse side of the bill depicts a picture of the signing of the Declaration of Independence in keeping with this year's Bicentennial observance.

8% Of 1975 Burley Crop Went Under Loan

Growers consigned 50 1/2 million pounds of burley tobacco to the price-support program in the marketing season just completed, this being 8 per cent of the 1975 crop. It was the largest volume taken under loan in any crop year since 1970.

The Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association this week issued its final report of the season. Regular auctions ended March 3, but several cleanup sales followed during the month.

Alvin R. Beckley, executive secretary-treasurer of the association, noted that the 1975-76 marketing season broke a five-year string of small annual commitments, when in some years little or no burley went under price supports.

The report (each herewith) lists the seasons totals for each of the 30 markets in the area where the association administers price supports—the states of Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia and Missouri. These markets accounted for association receipts of 31,657,806 pounds.

Receipts from the 1975 crop went to the Burley Stabilization Corp. of Knoxville, Tenn., operating in Tennessee, North Carolina and Virginia, where 18,992,670 pounds or 10.85 per cent of burley went under loan.

The entire range of 106 burley grades is represented in this year's pool receipts, said Beckley at the Co-op's offices in Lexington.

Reviewing the 1975 crop sales the U.S. marketings news service reported 679,738,354 pounds auctioned for an average of $105.50, down $8.26 per hundred from the previous year's $113.7 average, which was a record high. The market's $117 top this year came on after Christmas sales.

In viewing of rising cigarette sales, an increased need for leaf is anticipated and burley stocks are viewed as "barely adequate."

To keep supplies in line with demand, a 5 per cent production cut in the area where the association administers price supports—the states of Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia and Missouri. These markets accounted for association receipts of 31,657,806 pounds.

FRANKFORT WATCHLINE

Kentucky voters will have an opportunity in November, 1977, to decide whether they want to call a constitutional convention to revise the current, 84-year-old document under which the state operates.

The General Assemblies of 1974 and 1976 passed measures placing the question on the ballot. While it has, thus far, generated little excitement, if Kentucky voters run true to the past, it will be the hottest issue of 1977.

There is, however, no guarantee that the voters will run true. This time last year, it is likely that most political speculators would have guessed that a question would have had no chance of passing, regardless of how it was worded.

Something very strange happened in November, though. Voters approved, by a respectable margin, a constitutional amendment revamping the entire court system in the Commonwealth, something political speculators gave almost no chance of happening.

It is still a popular game in Frankfort trying to figure out just what pushed that one over. Was it genuine concern over the current court system and a desire to modernize it? Was there too much confidence on the part of the opponents that voters would automatically turn it down?

Did the urban vote turn the tide toward reform? It is in urban areas that the courts have been facing their severest tests.

Or was it the accompanying amendment extending the Homestead Exemption Act for the elderly?

Probably all these played a part, but it would be this writer's guess that the last one may have had the biggest effect.

Wise political heads know that the best way to... a controversial question passed is to see to it that it is right next to a question almost everyone wants to vote for, so that many voters, rather than read carefully, flip both "yes" levers to guarantee the proper vote on the one they want for sure.

The constitutional convention question will have no such help. The 1976

General Assembly failed to come up with any constitutional amendments to be placed on the 1977 ballot and the constitutional convention call, which had to be approved by two sessions of the General Assembly, will have to stand alone.

This is seen as a potential debut, but the biggest asset the question could have is the fact that the court reform amendment was approved last year. On the last constitutional revision try, roundly trounced by the voters, it was considered probably that it was the power of the county judges, coupled with a traditional reluctance to change the old constitution, that did it in.

The judicial reform amendment of last year will strip those county judges of all their judicial functions, seriously diluting the total weight those judges now have, particularly in the rural counties.

With the stumbling block of judicial reform already out of the way, there is a great deal of optimism about the chances of voters approving the constitutional convention and later, the new constitution itself.

The question could have something else going for it. Gov. Julian Carroll, it has, as yet, taken no stand on the question that will appear on the ballot, but he dropped a broad hint earlier this year that he was not unprepared to tackle the state constitution if need be. That remark has been broadly interpreted as evidence that Carroll will strongly support the convention.

If one supposes that the voters decide to call a convention, that group of revisers would be in action in 1978 and their proposed revision would be on the ballot in 1979, a gubernatorial election year.

If Carroll were to consider that revision a personal monument to his term in office, 1979 would end up as one of the hottest election years ever, with a lame-duck governor pushing constitutional reform and a pair of candidates for governor who may both be for it, or against it, or even split.

Last year, Carroll and his Republican opponent, Robert Gable, endorsed the judicial reform amendment.

It is significant that the fruits of the constitutional convention will be placed on the ballot, if it need not have been that way. The product of a convention can become law without the voters' approval.

But Rep. Joe Clark, D-Danville, who pushed the bill through both sessions, said he and other supporters decided early that unless it was established in the call that the new constitution itself be submitted to the voters, it would have no chance at all. *****

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

No wonder there is no progress in developing Rockcastle County.

In my opinion, one big reason is the elderly people who have been here since they were born, have made their way through life and now have everything they want or ever will need. So they hold back progress by not letting anything change that will bring money into the county.

Take Brodhead, for instance! What does it have for the young people? Nothing, of course, unless they want to take up drinking or smoking pot, and believe me, there is plenty of places they can buy it. If there was something for the young people to do and places to go maybe they wouldn't turn to drinking and smoking pot and hanging around the streets trying to find something destructive to get into. I think they are crying out for help when they turn to these measures.

The older generation owes our young people a chance in life and to show them we care about their future. I think that this county should be wet instead of dry. The reason is Rockcastle County people pour all their money into places like Richmond, Kentucky (Would you believe we helped make Richmond what it is today?)

Here's a question you should ask your readers: What if all the money that is spent in Richmond for beer and whiskey and brought back here to be bootlegged was spent here to begin with? The answer is this place would soon build up. It needs industry, more recreation for the young, more shopping centers. More doctors would come in to serve the people. That's what would happen if this county was wet, also the thousands of people who drink and bootleg would be doing it legally instead of breaking the law.

So, I say this county needs help and the only way is to live today as today and not live it like it was the 18th century. This is the 20th century, let's live in it like it was the 20th century, not the 18th.

THE EFFECTS OF FEMALE ALCOHOLISM ON CHILDREN

Children have always been the innocent victims of alcoholic parents. Many of the psychological ills and social stigmas they face have been well documented. Investigators are now finding many new dangers the unborn child faces by having an alcoholic mother.

Research now indicates that maternal alcoholism can cause serious defects in the fetal development and infant addition to alcohol.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome is manifested in shorter babies, low birth weight, underdeveloped jaw, small head, heart and limb abnormalities and low I.Q. Some researchers say this may be caused by a combination of the effects of the alcoholism and malnutrition of the mothers. Jones and Smith, in their research of 1973, say that the fetal alcohol syndrome can be shown to be directly attributed to alcohol. In addition to tremors, irritability and other symptoms of alcohol withdrawal among babies born to alcoholic mothers, there is evidence of brain damage and early stages of liver disease.

The Cumberland River Comprehensive Care - Center, encourages the citizens of Southeastern Kentucky to learn more about the effects of alcoholism and the family.

Down on the Farm

By Roy G. Brown
Assistant Vice President
Cumberland PCA

This is the time of the year to do some important checking on your farming operations.

Before we turn our cattle out to pasture, have we treated for lice, worms, made proper preparation by placing backrubbers, dust bags or other fly control methods in places where cattle will travel daily? Have we vaccinated for blackleg, bangs and other diseases? Do we have salt, minerals and plenty of water available.

These may seem simple things, but they are very important to our livestock and to us at the selling time of our livestock.

Another checkup is fencing. Do we have fences and gates around our pasture in shape to protect our livestock. A little repair work now may save us a lot of time and work later at a busy time when we need to be in our crops. It may also save a few head of cattle.

Do we check for buckeyes? They sometimes poison cattle. Also do we check after a storm for wild cherry trees limbs blown off? When they will they will also poison cattle.

These are a few simple things, but very important ones to every farmer

THE NEXT STEP

Why worry about tomorrow. Why worry if your steps are getting slow. For if your life has been spent for Jesus. You don't have much farther to go.
 For the next hand you shake might be the hand of the Savior. The next step you take, could be on the streets of Burest gold, and the next meal could be the marriage supper. And the next touch you feel, God could be blessing your soul.
 Be strong and keep on going. Don't be angry, when things go wrong. Don't give up, for its almost over. All signs are pointing for home.

CONSUMER COMMENTS
 By Robert F. Stephens
 Attorney General

Women have had the difficult time over the years gaining acceptance as credit-worthy people. They have, in short, suffered from credit discrimination.
 Take, for example, a woman with a steady job and income who was not able to get a bank account in her own name, or a woman who was denied a loan unless her husband co-signed with her. Single, widowed, divorced or separated women frequently have been denied credit in the past, even though they were qualified applicants and were earning livings for their families.
 The Equal Credit Opportunity Act has changed all of this by extending the credit rights of women. It became effective Oct. 28, 1975, and insures that credit will be available on fair and impartial terms to any credit-worthy applicant, without discrimination on the basis of sex or marital status.
 It governs, to some extent, the kinds of questions which can be used in conducting credit checks. For instance, all terms on a credit application must be neutral as to sex and marital status and a woman cannot be required to reapply for credit or to close an account because she has changed her name or marital status.

A creditor is also prohibited from asking her about when and how many children she intends to have, or to discount her income because, in the creditor's opinion, she will not continue working. In sum, when you apply for credit, you must be evaluated on an individual basis as to how credit-worthy you are at the particular point of time.
 At the time you apply for credit, you must receive a notice which should read in short that the Federal Equal Credit Opportunity Act prohibits creditors from discrimination against credit applicants on the basis of sex or marital status. It should also contain a description of the business you are dealing with and the name and address of the federal agency which administers compliance with this law.
 If you do not receive such a notice, or believe that you are credit worthy and have been denied due to your sex or marital status, take you complaint to the appropriate agency. The creditor must notify the applicant of action taken on the credit application within a reasonable period of time.
 If you have a consumer complaint, write to the Attorney General's Division of Consumer Protection, Room 34, The Capitol, Frankfort, Ky. 40601. The office has found that it can most effectively deal with written complaints and encourages you to write when you have a complaint. However, if you have an emergency situation, call the consumer hotline. That number is 1-800-372-2960.

funeral in recent years were 76.7% satisfied with the way funeral directors served them.
 That was the underlying conclusion in the survey's findings released today in Milwaukee, Wisconsin by Central Surveys, Inc., who conducted the opinion survey during the last two months on the public's attitudes toward funeral directors.
 The survey also found that: 95% felt the funeral director did a good job of explaining the charges for services, facilities and merchandise available.
 Most people feel that funeral directors' charges are "in line" rather than "high" or "low."
 87% said the funeral director and his staff were helpful and considerate in all ways.
 Most people would call the same funeral director again.
 Only a very small minority had any unfavorable comments.
 Respondents also agreed that funeral directors gave an adequate explanation of the services, facilities and merchandise they had available and 94% said the funeral director did not attempt to pressure them into undesired or unnecessary expenses, services, facilities or merchandise.
 The survey results substantiate what funeral directors and funeral director associations, both state and national, have been saying since the Federal Trade Commission started its inquiry into funeral practices, that the vast majority of Americans are well

Rockcastle Recollections

BY JOHN LAIR

Of prime importance in the development of the history of religion on the Kentucky frontier was the Circuit Rider who rode the dim and dangerous forest trails to carry the gospel to the most remote settlements. The Catholic priests who accompanied the first French explorers in their penetration of the northwest territory, or the Spaniards in the Southwest, worked largely with the Indian tribes and mission settlements, with the wealth and influence of their nations behind them, but the protestant movement had no such background and their missionary work had to be on a much smaller scale.

The Presbyterian and Methodist minister were first in the field, with the Baptist gaining strength in the latter days of the period. There was never much to back them and their ministers were sadly underpaid. At least, one of them has reported that in one year his salary was only $8.00. Of course, most of their actual needs in the field were taken care of by members of the congregation they served, but most of them had families at home who had to be provided for and there was never enough money for that. The territory was divided into circuits, many of them several hundred miles in extent, and most of the minister's time was spent in riding his circuit, in all kinds of weather and over all kinds of roads—or even animal trails which had never known the axe.

Once each year the travelling ministers were called to a central point for a conference and during this meeting were assigned to their individual circuits for the coming year. An older preacher or one more advanced in the organization, would sometimes be assigned as supervisor over many circuits or conferences to instruct and check on the younger riders and their progress. It took a minister with a great and unflagging zeal to become a circuit rider in the first place, and their dedication to their work had to remain at a high level to cause them to continue their rounds, year after year, in all kinds of weather, exposed to the constant danger of Indian and wild animal attack.

Many times, on their longer rides to more remote settlements or communities they would have to spend a night in the Wilderness, in such sections where settlers' cabins were more than a day's journey apart and dark would overtake them before they had found shelter for the night. I have a unique memento of those days in a small earthenware jug I secured years ago from a descendant of Reverend Peter Cartright, one of the outstanding Circuit Riders of history. She told me that it was a tradition in the family that Cartright carried this small jug tied to the back of his saddle and when he located a good spring in the Wilderness and had a refreshing drink he would fill the jug to take along with him so that the next time he grew thirsty he would not have to take time to search for a spring to assuage his thirst. She also volunteered the information that there was an additional tradition in the family that when he started out on one of these long trips in the wintertime and feared that he would have to sleep out in the snow and cold, he sometimes filled the jug with something stronger than spring water. It must be remembered that in that day it was not considered unusual for ministers to drink like anybody else.

Peter Cartright was born in Amherst County, Virginia, in 1785 and was brought to Kentucky by his parents soon after the close of the Revolution, in which his father served for two years. Although quite young at the time, he remembered many incidents which took place while they were travelling across Rockcastle County on Skaggs Trace. There were two hundred families making up the party, and as further protection they had along one hundred well armed young single men as guards. In spite of this protection, several families were killed by the Indians when they fell behind the main party near Negro Creek.

The Cartright family settled first in what is now Lincoln County, near the present site of Lancaster, Kentucky, moving later to Logan County, near Russellville, which was then known as Fogues Harbor, on account of the many outlaws and desperate characters located there. Young Cartright grew up a wild and reckless boy, but was early converted to the Methodist faith and for many years served as an itinerant, serving a number of circuits in succession. He officiated as a circuit rider for a total of fifty-three years and in 1856 published the story of his life in book form.

During his lifetime he had many adventures. He was unusually strong and of an independent and aggressive disposition. In the early days of camp meetings there were many attempts by the rowdy and dissolute characters to interfere with religious services. They soon learned, however, to stay clear of Reverend Peter Cartright. When they started a disturbance and tried to break up his meetings he was quick to come down from the pulpit, crack a few heads together and then go on with his sermon as though nothing had happened. It was claimed by many that in personal combat he once bested the notorious Mike Fink, "Half-hoss, half-Alligator" king of the riverboat men and the terror of the Ohio. I have also read that he once defeated the young Abraham Lincoln for a minor political post in Illinois, although I have seen no proof of this. He mentions in his autobiography only that he defeated a political opponent in Sangamon County, which happened at a time when Lincoln was living in that area.

Better and more favorably known as Bishop Asbury, ranking Methodist minister of the Western Conference from 1797 to early 1800's. He remained unmarried and liberally devoted his life to the work of bringing the gospel to the frontier. He made several trips across Rockcastle County, then unformed and only sparsely settled, and has written an excellent account of his experiences along Skaggs Trace and Rockcastle River, when stations were few and far between.

In addition to the organized and directed work among official Circuit Riders, there were many individual preachers, self-taught and self-supported who unselfishly devoted their lives to carrying the gospel to remote backwoods sections at great financial loss to themselves and families. In my boyhood days the regular circuit-rider system had been abolished, or else never carried on in this district, but the individual preachers who attempted the task still survived, though few in number and seldom covering such distances as the old circuit system demanded. Here in our own neighborhood were dedicated country preachers who worked on the farm through the week to make a living and on Sunday preached in the little country church houses where the congregation was not able to pay for their services. In some instances small collections were taken up, sometimes amounting to less than a dollar, but the preacher never asked for money. He was sincere in his desire to win souls for Christ and left himself well paid when he succeeded in doing so.

Another outstanding circuit rider was the Reverend J. B. Finley, who came with his father's family from Pennsylvania to near Flemingsburg, Kentucky, in 1789. In 1796 Reverend Finley himself migrated to the Northwestern Territory, settling near what is now Chillicothe, Ohio. He soon followed in the footsteps of his father, a minister, and before long was an active member of the circuit riding conference for that region. He went on to become in time one of the most active and effective of that persuasion, spending much time in converting the Indians, in whose villages he lived for many months at a time. Later in life he authored excellent books dealing with his experiences. One of these, "Life Among the Indians," I consider one of the most interesting of
